1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 By filing this action, Plaintiffs seek to inject themselves and this Court into the process of 3 establishing and overseeing the United States' foreign policy and the manner in which the federal 4 government is waging the war in Iraq. As explained below, Plaintiffs' Second Amended 5 Complaint ("Complaint" or "SAC") is legally meritless and should be dismissed with prejudice.

7 It is no accident that Plaintiffs have not sued the United States government or any United 8 States officials in this action, even though Plaintiffs falsely allege that Defendants entered into a 9 conspiracy with elements of the United States government to engage in the conduct alleged in 10 the Complaint. Indeed, Plaintiffs' principal theory appears to be that they can hide behind the 11 concept of "upon information and belief," a harbor into which Plaintiffs retreat no less than 37
12 times in their Complaint, in order to allege this conspiracy, and that they can then tag Defendants 13 with every wrong supposedly committed by the United States government against detainees in 14 Iraq. SAC ¶ 26. The single theme pervading Plaintiffs' Complaint is their willingness to make 15 up facts, attaching the caveat that such allegations are "upon information and belief," every time 16 Plaintiffs were confronted with the absence of a facts supporting their claims.

19 To be perfectly clear, Defendants CACI International Inc, CACI INC. – FEDERAL, and 20 CACI N.V. (collectively, the "CACI Defendants") categorically deny that they or any other 21 CACI company engaged in a conspiracy with anyone to mistreat detainees in Iraq.<sup>1</sup> The CACI 22 Defendants do not condone the mistreatment of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison or elsewhere, and 23 have consistently reaffirmed that position. The abject falsity of Plaintiffs' allegations aside, 24 Plaintiffs' Complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted for several reasons.

27
28 <sup>1</sup> Consistent with Plaintiffs' failure to conduct any reasonable pre-filing inquiry as to the truth of their allegations, Plaintiffs have not even sued the CACI entity that actually provided interrogators to the United States armed forces in support of its mission in Iraq.

1           First, Plaintiffs' claims present a nonjusticiable political question in that they seek 2 recompense for injuries allegedly inflicted upon them during the prosecution of a war. Such 3 claims historically have been for the political branches to resolve, with the federal courts playing 4 no role in that process. Indeed, the law for two centuries has been that wartime reparations 5 claims belong to nations and not to individuals, and must be resolved on a nation-to-nation level.

7           Second, all of Plaintiffs' federal and state tort claims are preempted as being inconsistent 8 with the "combatant activities" exception to the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Ninth Circuit 9 squarely has held that Plaintiffs should not be permitted to skirt the combatant activities 10 exception by asserting their wartime injury claims against defense contractors.

12           Third, Plaintiffs' RICO claims are legally infirm because they fail to allege a cognizable 13 injury to Plaintiffs' business or property as a result of Defendants' supposed conduct. Moreover, 14 Plaintiffs have failed sufficiently to allege predicate acts of racketeering, a pattern of 15 racketeering activity, or the existence of a racketeering enterprise.

17           Fourth, Plaintiffs' claims under the Alien Tort Claims Act ("ATCA") lack merit because 18 ATCA does not create a private right of action for injuries occurring during an external war, such 19 as the war in Iraq. Moreover, Plaintiffs have neither exhausted their remedies nor defined their 20 causes of action with the degree of particularity required under ATCA.

22           Fifth, Plaintiffs' "constitutional" claims fail because Plaintiffs, as noncitizens, are not 23 entitled to the protections of the United States Constitution for alleged injuries occurring outside 24 the United States.

26           Sixth, Plaintiffs' "Geneva Conventions" claim fails because no private right of action 27 exists for alleged violations of the Geneva Conventions.
28

1            Seventh, Plaintiffs' claim under the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons 2 Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc, fails as a matter of law because that statute applies only to the actions 3 of states regarding institutions under state control.

5            Eighth, Plaintiffs' claim of violations of United States contracting laws fails because 6 Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts that, if true, would establish such a violation. Moreover, 7 Plaintiffs lack standing to assert such a claim.

9            The Court should not permit Plaintiffs to use this suit and Defendants as pawns in their 10 obvious effort to turn every decision and action of the United States in waging the war in Iraq 11 into a litigable issue in the federal courts. Plaintiffs' fundamental quarrel is with the United 12 States and its actions in prosecuting the war, and the Court should not allow Plaintiffs to drag 13 Defendants through this lawsuit so that Plaintiffs can sidestep the clear prohibitions on vetting 14 such claims in the federal court. Therefore, the Court should dismiss all of Plaintiffs' claims.

15 16 II. ANALYSIS

17 A. The Standard for CACI's Motion to Dismiss

18            CACI has moved to dismiss the Complaint for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, failure 19 to state a claim, and for failure to join an indispensable party. The law is somewhat unsettled 20 whether a motion to dismiss a claim based on the political question doctrine is appropriately 21 treated as a challenge to the Court's subject-matter jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1) or a 12(b)(6)
22 motion that challenges the legal sufficiency of the complaint. See 13A Charles A. Wright, et al., 23 Federal Practice & Procedure § 3534.3 (2d ed. 1984); see also Sarei v. Rio Tinto plc, 221 F.
24 Supp. 2d 1116, 1193 n.273 (C.D. Cal. 2002).

26            The plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating the existence of subject-matter 27 jurisdiction. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 511 U.S. 375, 377 (1994). Where, as here, the 28 subject-matter jurisdiction challenge attacks the complaint on its face, the Court need not resolve

1 whether the motion is decided under Rule 12(b)(1) or Rule 12(b)(6) because the standard is 2 identical under both rules: the Court accepts all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint as true
3 for purposes of the motion. Sarei, 221 F. Supp. 2d at 1193 & n.273; Valdez v. United States, 837 4 F. Supp. 1065, 1067 (E.D. Cal. 1993), aff'd, 56 F.3d 1177 (9th Cir. 1995).

6 A motion pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) should be granted if it appears beyond doubt that the 7 plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of her claim which would entitle her to relief.
8 Edwards v. Marin Park, Inc., 356 F.3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2004) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S.
9 41, 45-46 (1957)). While the Court must accept the plaintiff's allegations as true and construe 10 them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, "conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted 11 inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss." Ove v. Gwinn, 264 F.3d 817, 821 (9th 12 Cir. 2001); see also Ivey v. Bd. of Regents, 673 F.2d 266, 268 (9th Cir. 1982).

14 The CACI Defendants seek dismissal of Count XXV for failure to state a claim and for 15 failure to join an indispensable party. A motion to dismiss for failure to join an indispensable 16 party should be granted where a nonparty is indispensable to the resolution of the dispute 17 between the parties and equity and good conscience require that the case be dismissed in the 18 absence of the indispensable party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b). Because Plaintiffs' claims are legally 19 and factually insufficient, the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint in its entirety.

22 B. Plaintiffs' Claims Present Nonjusticiable Political Questions

23 Plaintiffs' claims necessarily ask this Court to sit in judgment of the manner in which the 24 United States has waged the war in Iraq. Plaintiffs challenge the decisions made by the United 25 States armed forces in deciding which persons found in the combat theater would be detained, as 26 well as the standards established by the United States government in deciding how to interrogate 27 those that were detained. Damages claims based on the conduct of war are classic political 28

1 questions that are committed exclusively to Congress and the President for resolution. Indeed, 2 the Supreme Court has observed on several occasions that decisions regarding the detention of 3 persons found in a combat theater are an inseparable component of the prosecution of war. See 4 Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 124 S. Ct. 2633, 2640 (2004) (noting that arrest and detention activities “by 5 ‘universal agreement and practice,’ are ‘important incident[s] of war’” (citing Ex parte Quirin, 6 317 U.S. 1, 28 (1942))). Therefore, the Court should dismiss all of Plaintiffs’ claims.

8 In Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962), the Supreme Court set forth the controlling 9 standards for determining whether a case raises a nonjusticiable political question. After 10 reviewing the doctrine’s history, the Court noted that cases raising political questions generally 11 have one or more of the of the following characteristics: 12

- 13 (1) a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a 14 coordinate political department;
- 15 (2) a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it;
- 16 (3) the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a 17 kind clearly for non-judicial discretion;
- 18 (4) the impossibility of a court’s undertaking independent resolution without 19 expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government;
- 20 (5) an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision 21 already made; or
- 22 (6) the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by 23 various departments on one question.

24 Id. at 217. If any “one of these formulations is inextricable from the case,” the Court must 25 dismiss the case as presenting a nonjusticiable political question. Id.; United States v. Mandel, 26 914 F.2d 1215, 1222 (9th Cir. 1990).

27 While it is true that not every case having a foreign affairs connection presents a political 28 question, the political question doctrine unquestionably has widespread application to “questions

1 touching foreign relations.” Baker, 369 U.S. at 211; see also United States v. Curtiss-Wright
2 Corp., 299 U.S. 2304, 320 (1936) (noting that the political question doctrine distinguishes 3 between cases involving foreign relations and those involving domestic issues); United States v.
4 Martinez, 904 F.2d 601, 602 (11th Cir. 1990) (observing that “the political question doctrine 5 routinely precludes judicial scrutiny” of foreign affairs issues). Rather than automatically 6 holding that any suit relating in any way to foreign relations presents a nonjusticiable political 7 question, the Court instead must undertake a “discriminating analysis of the particular question 8 posed, in terms of the history of its management by the political branches, its susceptibility to 9 judicial handling in light of its nature and posture in the specific case, and the possible 10 consequences of judicial action.” Baker, 369 U.S. at 211-12.

13 The present action fits squarely within the class of cases touching on foreign relations to 14 which the political question doctrine applies. Plaintiffs seek reparations for injuries – real or 15 imagined – that they allegedly suffered as a consequence of the United States’ conduct of the war 16 in Iraq. Determinations as to the propriety of such civil recompense has always been the 17 exclusive province of the political branches of government. Moreover, Plaintiffs’ claims 18 necessarily ask this Court to sit in judgment of virtually every decision the Executive branch has 19 made in prosecuting the war in Iraq, even the detailed decisions – which often will be based on 20 classified information – as to which persons found in the combat zone would be apprehended 21 and detained. For these reasons, the Court should dismiss all of Plaintiffs’ claims.

24 1. Claims for Wartime Reparations Present Classic Political Questions

25 Reduced to their essentials, Plaintiffs’ claims seek reparations for the injuries that 26 Plaintiffs allegedly suffered to their persons and/or property as a consequence of the actions of 27 the United States in invading and occupying Iraq. To the extent that Plaintiffs’ allegations of 28

1 abuse, as set forth in their Complaint, are in fact accurate, the CACI Defendants repeatedly have 2 condemned the detainee abuse detailed in the media, and trust that the United States government 3 will take appropriate action against those responsible for such abuse. CACI expresses no view as 4 to the propriety of reparations over and above the billions of dollars committed by Congress for 5 the rebuilding of Iraq, but stresses that the advisability of wartime reparations presents a political 6 question to be determined by the political branches of government, and it is inappropriate for the 7 courts to consider requests for wartime reparations asserted against either the United States or 8 private entities that have supported the United States' efforts in Iraq.

11 American courts have long recognized that they have no role in assessing the propriety of 12 reparations for wartime injuries. In Ware v. Hylton, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 199, 230 (1796), the 13 plaintiffs, citizens of Great Britain, sued American citizens to recover debts that had been 14 confiscated by the Commonwealth of Virginia during the American Revolution. Writing for the 15 Supreme Court, Justice Chase observed that recovery for wartime losses was a matter committed 16 to diplomacy among the affected governments and was not a matter for private litigation:

18 [T]he restitution of, or compensation for, British property 19 confiscated, or extinguished, during the war, by any of the United 20 States, could only be provided for by the treaty of peace; and if 21 there had been no provision, respecting these subjects, in the 22 treaty, they could not be agitated after the treaty, by the British 23 government, much less by her subjects in courts of justice.

25 Similarly, in Perrin v. United States, 4 Ct. Cl. 543 (1868), aff'd, 79 U.S. 315 (1870), the 26 plaintiffs, noncombatant citizens of France, sought to recover from the United States for 27 damages they suffered to their property as a result of the United States Navy's intentional 28 destruction of the entire town of Greytown, Nicaragua. After beginning with the assumption "that the bombardment and destruction of Greytown was illegal and not justified by the law of 1 nations,” id. at 544, the court still held that plaintiffs were entitled to no recovery because 2 compensation for wartime injuries presents a classic political question properly resolved only 3 through negotiations among the affected nations:

5 [I]t will be readily seen that the questions raised are such as can 6 only be determined between the United States and the governments 7 whose citizens it is alleged have been injured by the injurious acts 8 of this government. They are international political questions, 9 which no court of this country in a case of this kind is authorized 10 or empowered to decide. They grew out of and relate to peace and 11 war, and to the relations and intercourse between this country and 12 foreign nations. They are political in their nature and character, 13 and under our system of government belong to the political 14 departments of the government to define, arrange, and decide.

15 Id. (emphasis added). The Supreme Court summarily affirmed on the grounds that the plaintiffs’ 16 claim was not “founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an executive 17 department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States,” 18 thereby reaffirming that such compensation decisions belong to the political branches and not to 19 the courts. Perrin v. United States, 79 U.S. 315, 315 (1870). These cases establish that, from the 20 earliest days of the Republic, the federal courts have recognized that they have no role in 21 compensating individuals, whether the defendant is the United States or a private party, for 22 injuries suffered as a result of the manner in which the United States wages war, even if the 23 United States violated the law of nations through its warfighting tactics. Rather, the advisability 24 of such compensation appropriately is determined through the diplomatic efforts of the political 25 branches of government.

26 More recent cases have echoed this principle. For example, in Zivkovich v. Vatican Bank, 27 242 F. Supp. 2d 659, 666-67 (N.D. Cal. 2002), the court held that claims against a bank for 28 financial losses suffered by the plaintiff during World War II were reparations claims constitutionally committed to the political branches: “As an issue affecting United States

1 relations within the international community, war reparations fall within the domain of the 2 political branches and are not subject to judicial review.” Id. at 666 (internal quotations and 3 citations omitted).

5 The Zivkovich court also rejected plaintiff’s argument that his claim was not for 6 reparations because it was asserted against a private bank:

7 Plaintiff attempts to distinguish the instant action from actions for 8 war reparations, arguing that he is not asserting claims for 9 reparations but for bank restitution. This distinction is one without 10 a difference. Beginning with the Versailles Treaty concluding 11 World War I, the term “reparations” has been deemed to refer to 12 “all the loss and damage to which . . . Governments and their 13 nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed 14 on them.” Because here Plaintiff’s claims stem from the 15 conversion and use of property plundered during World War II, 16 Plaintiff seeks to remedy a “loss and damage” he was subjected to 17 as a consequence of war.

18 Id. at 666-67 (citations omitted) (omission in original); see also In re African-American Slave
19 Descendants Litig., 304 F. Supp. 2d 1027, 1055 (N.D. Ill. 2004) (“[T]here are numerous cases 20 where the federal courts have dismissed claims by private plaintiffs against private defendants on 21 the basis of the political question doctrine. The majority of these cases arise in the context of 22 reparations claims arising out of World War II.”); Anderman v. Fed. Repub. of Austria, 256 F.
23 Supp. 2d 1098, 1117 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (“[C]ourts have not hesitated to apply the political 24 question doctrine based on the executive branch’s foreign affairs power to cases in which private 25 entities are defendants.”); Sarei, 221 F. Supp. 2d at 1195 (“[W]hether defendants are liable on 26 several of plaintiffs’ claims turns on whether [Papua New Guinea] and/or its military violated 27 international law. That the named parties are private entities does not change this fact.”).<sup>2</sup> 28 <sup>2</sup> See also Gross v. German Found. Indus. Initiative, 320 F. Supp. 2d 235, 254 (D.N.J.

2004) (dismissing World War II-era reparations claims against German companies).

1 Taken together, the cases cited above stand for the proposition that claims for 2 compensation for injuries suffered as a consequence of war – whether asserted against 3 governments or against private companies – present nonjusticiable political questions. These 4 cases present political questions even when the claims involve intentional infliction of injury, 5 and even when the claims involve credible allegations of some of the most heinous conduct 6 imaginable, such as forced labor, slavery, sexual assault, and wartime plunder. Federal courts 7 have reached this conclusion because, as discussed below, wartime compensation claims 8 implicate several of the factors set out in Baker v. Carr as characteristic of political questions.

11 2. The Propriety of Reparations for Injuries Incurred in the Prosecution 12 of War Is An Issue Textually Committed to the Political Branches

13 Claims seeking compensation for injuries allegedly suffered as a consequence of the 14 manner in which the United States has conducted the war in Iraq are textually committed to, and 15 historically resolved by, the political branches as part of their war and foreign affairs powers. As 16 the Supreme Court observed:

17 Since claims remaining in the aftermath of hostilities may be 18 ‘sources of friction’ acting as an ‘impediment to resumption of 19 friendly relations’ between the countries involved, there is a 20 ‘longstanding practice’ of the national executive to settle them in 21 discharging its responsibility to maintain the Nation’s relationships 22 with other countries.

23 Am. Ins. Ass’n v. Garamendi, 539 U.S. 396, 420 (2003) (quoting United States v. Pink, 315 U.S.
24 203, 225 (1942), and Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 679 (1981)). In Garamendi, the 25 Court even noted that resolution of wartime claims against private parties is a function 26 historically undertaken by the political branches and not by the courts. Id. at 416 (“Historically, 27 wartime claims against even nominally private entities have become issues in international 28 diplomacy . . . . As shown by the history of insurance confiscation mentioned earlier, untangling

1 government policy from private initiative during war time is often so hard that diplomatic action 2 settling claims against private parties may well be just as essential in the aftermath of hostilities 3 as diplomacy to settle claims against foreign governments.”).

5 The historical commitment to the political branches of wartime reparations claims, even 6 reparations claims against private entities, flows directly from the Constitution’s commitment of 7 matters of war and foreign policy to Congress and the President. Sale v. Haitian Centers 8 Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 188 (1993) (noting that the President has “unique responsibility” for 9 the conduct of “foreign and military affairs”); Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S.
10 579, 610-11 (1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring) (noting that Article II of the Constitution bests 11 the President with a “vast share of responsibility for the conduct of our foreign affairs”); Oetgen 12 v. Central Leather Co., 246 U.S. 297, 302 (1918) (“The conduct of the foreign relations of our 13 government is committed by the Constitution to the executive and legislative . . . .”); Deutsch v.
14 Turner Corp., 324 F.3d 692, 708-09 (9th Cir. 2003) (listing constitutional provisions committing 15 war and foreign policy matters to the political branches); Mingtai Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v.
16 United Parcel Serv., 177 F.3d 1142, 1144 (9th Cir. 1999) (“[T]he conduct of foreign relations is 17 committed by the Constitution to the political departments of the Federal Government; [and] . . .
18 the propriety of the exercise of that power is not open to judicial review.” (quoting Pink, 315 19 U.S. at 222-23)); Sarnoff v. Connally, 457 F.2d 809, 809 (9th Cir. 1972) (“The conduct of 20 foreign affairs is within the exclusive province of Congress and the Executive.”); Zivkovich, 242 21 F. Supp. 2d at 668 (dismissing reparations claim because “the Constitution relegates issues of 22 foreign policy to the political departments of the government”); Alperin v. Vatican Bank, 242 F.

1 Supp. 2d 686, 689-90 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (dismissing reparations claim because issue is textually 2 committed to the political branches).<sup>3</sup>

4 Indeed, because compensation for wartime injuries is indivisible from the power to 5 conduct war and foreign policy, it has been recognized for more than two centuries that such 6 compensation claims belong to governments, not individuals, and are to be resolved on a 7 government-to-government level without the interference of private litigation. Ware, 3 U.S. (3 8 Dall.) at 230; Perrin, 4 Ct. Cl. at 544; see also Frumkin v. JA Jones, Inc., 129 F. Supp. 2d 370, 9 376 (D.N.J. 2001) (dismissing World War II-era forced labor claims against German company 10 because “[c]laims for war reparations arising out of World War II have always been managed on 11 a governmental level”); Iwanowa v. Ford Motor Co., 67 F. Supp. 2d 424, 485 (D.N.J. 1999)

13 governments.”); Burger-Fischer v. Degussa AG, 65 F. Supp. 2d 248, 273 (D.N.J. 1999) (“Under 14 international law claims for compensation by individuals harmed by war-related activity belong 15 exclusively to the state of which the individual is a citizen.”); El-Shifa Pharm. Indus. Co. v.

22 <sup>3</sup> The Ninth Circuit’s decision in Deutsch, 324 F.3d at 713 n.11, is not to the contrary.
23 While dismissing the plaintiffs’ claims on other grounds, the Deutsch court noted in a footnote 24 that it disagreed with the district court’s conclusion that the plaintiffs’ claims presented a 25 political question. The court came to this conclusion because the plaintiffs’ reparations claims 26 merely involved “the proper application of a treaty,” and did not require the court to make policy 27 judgments as to the propriety of reparations. Id. The Deutsch court reaffirmed, however, that “it 28 is impermissible for a court to make policy related to foreign affairs.” Id. Here, because there has been no treaty or executive agreement regarding reparations for injuries occurring in the Iraq conflict, the Court would be very much establishing foreign relations policy if it ruled on the propriety of reparations. Deutsch merely stands for the proposition that no political question would exist if the political branches resolved the reparations issue through treaty or executive agreement and the Court was asked simply to apply that agreement to Plaintiffs’ claims.

1 international law are political questions to be decided between governments.”), aff’d, ___ F.3d 2 ___, 2004 WL 1780921 (Fed. Cir. 2004).

3 For these reasons, the Constitution’s commitment to the political branches of the power 4 to conduct war renders and foreign policy precludes judicial involvement in determining the 5 propriety of monetary claims asserted by Plaintiffs for injuries they allegedly received as a result 6 of the manner in which the United States prosecuted the war in Iraq.<sup>4</sup>

8 3. There Are No Judicially Discoverable and Manageable Standards for 9 Evaluating Plaintiffs’ Claims

10 Much of the evidence bearing on Plaintiffs’ claims, and establishing Defendants’ utter 11 blamelessness with respect to those claims, likely will be impossible for the Court and the parties 12 to discover. Because there are no judicially manageable standards for evaluating Plaintiffs’ 13 claims, the political question doctrine renders Plaintiffs’ claims nonjusticiable. Any entitlement 14 Plaintiffs might claim to compensation should be directed to the political branches, which are in 15 a far better position to assess the facts surrounding each Plaintiff’s claims and to make a policy 16 determination as to the appropriateness of reparations.

18 The named Plaintiffs claim that they were illegally detained by the United States military, 19 and they also purport to speak on behalf of thousands of putative class members who were 20 supposedly illegally detained by the United States military. SAC ¶ 25 (alleging “arbitrary arrest

23 <sup>4</sup> Moreover, because the Constitution vests the power to wage war and conduct foreign 24 affairs in the political branches, adjudicating Plaintiffs’ reparations claims would implicate 25 several of the other concerns that the Baker Court found indicative of a political question. The 26 Court’s encroachment on the political branches’ war powers would require the Court to make 27 discretionary judgments on the merits of the United States’ war policy (implicating the third 28 Baker consideration), would demonstrate a lack of respect for the proper constitutional role of coordinate branches of government (implicating the fourth Baker factor), and could result in inconsistent statements regarding the United States’ policy in Iraq, implicating the fifth and sixth considerations announced in Baker. See Zivkovich, 242 F. Supp. 2d at 668.

1 and detention"). Moreover, the named Plaintiffs allege that they, and the innumerable putative
2 class members they purport to represent, were injured during their detentions by what Plaintiffs 3 call the "Torture Conspirators," a group defined to include Defendants, their employees, and 4 "certain government officials" who supposedly conspired to flout domestic and international 5 laws governing the conduct of interrogations. SAC ¶¶ 77, 80, 103, 110, 115, 120, 127, 129, 131, 6 133, 135, 139. Plaintiffs also allege that each Defendant is liable for all of the wrongful acts of 7 any other member of this so-called Torture Conspiracy. SAC ¶ 26. Thus, Plaintiffs seek to hold 8 CACI liable for the acts of the United States military (certain of whose officials are supposedly 9 part of this imaginary "Torture Conspiracy") in arresting and detaining the named Plaintiffs and 10 the thousands of other members of the putative class.

13 Federal courts regularly have held that they lack judicially manageable standards for 14 evaluating claims for wartime injuries that would require an extensive review of classified 15 materials, or materials that are unlikely to be discoverable because of the "fog of war." See 16 Chicago & S. Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103, 111 (1948) ("It would be 17 intolerable that courts, without the relevant information, should review and perhaps nullify 18 actions of the Executive taken on information properly held secret."); El-Shifa Pharm. Indus. Co.
19 v. United States, ___ F.3d ___, 2004 WL 1780921, at *19 (Fed. Cir. 2004) ("We are of the 20 opinion that the federal courts have no role in setting even minimal standards by which the 21 President, or his commanders, are to measure the veracity of intelligence gathered with the aim 22 of determining which assets, located beyond the shores of the United States, belong to the 23 Nation's friends and which belong to its enemies."); Anderman, 256 F. Supp. 2d at 1112-13 24 (dismissing reparations claim because "there is a very real possibility that the parties might not 25 be able to compile all of the relevant data, thus making any adjudication of the case both difficult
28

1 and imprudent”); Alperin, 242 F. Supp. 2d at 695 (“[T]here is a distinct possibility that the 2 parties might not be able to compile all of the relevant information, this making any attempt to 3 justify a ruling on the merits of an issue that will affect the nation difficult and imprudent” 4 (quoting Iwanowa, 67 F. Supp. 2d at 484)); Zivkovich, 242 F. Supp. 2d at 668 (dismissing 5 reparations claims in part based on court’s “concern with . . . the evidentiary difficulties already 6 evident in light of the time, place and manner in which the alleged conversion occurred”).<sup>5</sup>

8 As one court in this Circuit has observed, “[i]n wartime, it would be inappropriate to have 9 soldiers assembling evidence, collected from the ‘battlefield.’” Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. at 1495; 10 see also Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 779 (1950) (“It would be difficult to devise more 11 effective fettering of a field commander than to allow the very enemies he is ordered to reduce to 12 submission to call him to account in his own civil courts and divert his efforts and attention from 13 the military offensive abroad to the legal defensive at home.”). Indeed, for each and every 14 member of the class, the parties would need access to each and every piece of evidence 15 associated with that claimant’s arrest and detention – much of which likely is highly classified – 16 in order to assess the veracity of the claimant’s assertion that his or her detention by the United 17 States was unjustified. Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. at 1497 (dismissing “friendly fire” suit against 24 <sup>5</sup> The Ninth Circuit’s decision is Koohi v. United States, 976 F.2d 1328 (9th Cir. 1992), is 25 not to the contrary. In Koohi, the court held that the political question doctrine did not apply to 26 claims arising from a single event – the erroneous downing of a single commercial plane. Id. at 27 1331. Recent decisions by courts in this Circuit have found Koohi’s political question analysis 28 inapplicable to suits litigating wartime claims involving injuries incurred over a months-long period of time. See Alperin, 242 F. Supp. 2d at 693 n.9 (N.D. Cal. 2003). Moreover, the Koohi court’s political question analysis did not permit the case to go forward, as the court correctly affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs’ claims on preemption grounds. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1337.

1 all, of the evidence relating to each detainees arrest and detention is likely highly sensitive and in 2 the possession of the United States government, it also is likely that the United States will assert 3 a state secrets privilege to prevent discovery of these materials. See id. at 1495 (noting impact of 4 state secrets privilege on reparations cases). This is precisely the type of wartime claim that 5 defies resolution through the judicial process.

7 C. Plaintiffs' State and Federal Tort Claims (Counts III-IX and XV-XXIII) Are 8 Preempted

9 Plaintiffs have not joined the United States government or any of its officials as 10 defendants in this case because they know that the United States and its employees are immune 11 from suit. Fundamentally, Plaintiffs are using the artifice of an "upon information and belief" 12 conspiracy in an effort to obtain recovery through the backdoor for injuries supposedly caused by 13 the United States government's prosecution of the war in Iraq. Not surprisingly, precedent from 14 both the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit foreclose evasion of the federal government's 15 immunity through suits against government contractors such as CACI. See McKay v. Rockwell 16 Int'l Corp., 704 F.2d 444, 449 (9th Cir. 1983) ("To permit [petitioner] to proceed . . . here would 17 be to judicially admit at the back door that which has been legislatively turned away at the front 18 door. We do not believe that the [Federal Tort Claims] Act permits such a result." (alterations in 19 original) (quoting Stencel Aero Eng'g Corp. v. United States, 431 U.S. 666, 673 (1977)).

22 1. Preemption is Appropriate in Areas of "Unique Federal Interests" in 23 Order to Avoid a "Significant Conflict" With an Identifiable Federal 24 Policy

25 In Boyle v. United Technologies Corp., 487 U.S. 500 (1988), the Court held that federal 26 law preempted state law tort claims against the supplier of a military helicopter. In so holding, 27 the Court stated that state law tort claims may be preempted by federal law when "uniquely 28 federal interests' are . . . committed by the Constitution and laws of the United States to federal

1 control.” Id. at 504 (citations omitted). When “uniquely federal interests” are implicated by a 2 tort suit, preemption is required when “a ‘significant conflict’ exists between an identifiable 3 federal policy or interest and the [operation] of state law, or the application of state law would 4 frustrate specific objectives of federal legislation.” Id. at 507 (internal quotations and citations 5 omitted) (alteration in original).

7 Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has held that federal tort actions against government 8 contractors may be preempted by the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b) (“FTCA”), 9 when the claim would fall within one of the exceptions to the FTCA if the claim were asserted 10 against the United States government. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1336 (“We have also previously held 11 that those exceptions [to the FTCA] may preempt federal statutory tort actions [against 12 government contractors].”) (citing McKay, 704 F.2d at 444). Because CACI’s provision of 13 services to the United States government in support of the wartime efforts in Iraq implicate 14 uniquely federal interests that would be frustrated through imposition of tort liability upon 15 defendants, Plaintiffs’ federal and state tort claims (Counts III-IX and XV-XXIII) are preempted 16 and must be dismissed.

19 2. CACI’s Provision of Services in Iraq Under Federal Government 20 Contracts Implicates “Uniquely Federal Interests”

21 In Boyle, 487 U.S. at 505, the Supreme Court held that federal law preempted state law 22 tort claims against a government contractor that manufactured and repaired military helicopters 23 for the armed forces. As part of that inquiry, the Court held that “the civil liabilities arising out 24 of the performance of federal procurement contracts” implicate uniquely federal interests for 25 purposes of preemption analysis. Id. at 505-06. As a result, the Court held that federal law 26 would preempt the state tort claims if the application of state tort law would cause a “significant

1 conflict” with an identifiable federal interest or would “frustrate specific objectives” of federal 2 legislation. Id. at 507.<sup>6</sup>

4 If anything, the unique federal interest is even more pronounced in the present action than 5 it was in Boyle. While Boyle involved the peacetime manufacture and repair of a helicopter that 6 crashed during a training exercise off the Virginia coast, id. at 502, the present action involves a 7 government contractor’s provision of interrogators in a war zone in direct support of the United 8 States military’s war effort in Iraq. See Hamdi, 124 S. Ct. at 2640 (noting that arrest and 9 detention activities “by ‘universal agreement and practice,’ are ‘important incident[s] of war’”)
10 (citing Quirin, 317 U.S. at 28). The foreign relations of the United States, including the exercise 11 of the war-making power, is uniquely a federal prerogative over which the states have no 12 permissible role. Pink, 315 U.S. at 233 (“Power over external affairs is not shared by the States; 13 it is vested in the national government exclusively.”); Sarnoff, 457 F.2d at 809 (“The conduct of 14 foreign affairs is within the exclusive province of Congress and the Executive.”); The Federalist 15 No. 74 (Hamilton), at 447 (Clinton Rossiter ed. 1961) (“Of all the cares or concerns of 16 government, the direction of war most peculiarly demands those qualities which distinguish the 17 exercise of power by a single hand.”). Because Plaintiffs’ tort claims implicate uniquely federal 18 interests, they are preempted if the application of tort law would either significantly conflict with 19 a federal interest or frustrate the objective of federal legislation.

27 <sup>6</sup> In holding that federal law preempted tort suits against the manufacturer of the Aegis 28 weapons system, the Ninth Circuit necessarily came to the same conclusion that the civil liabilities of government contractors implicate a uniquely federal interest. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1336-37.

1                   3. Federal Law Preempts Plaintiffs' State and Federal Tort Claims 2                   Because Application of Tort Law Would Significantly Conflict With 3                   Federal Interests and Frustrate the Operation of the FTCA

4                   The FTCA abrogates the United States' sovereign immunity for certain tort claims. See 5                   28 U.S.C. § 1346(b). The FTCA, however, provides several express exceptions to this waiver of 6                   sovereign immunity. See 28 U.S.C. § 2680. The Supreme Court has held that state tort actions 7                   against government contractors create a significant conflict with federal interests when state law 8                   would permit a tort suit to proceed against a contractor when the same claim would fall within an 9                   FTCA exception if the claim were asserted against the United States. Boyle, 487 U.S. at 511.

10                   In Boyle, the Court noted that the "discretionary function" exception to the FTCA would 11                   bar a tort suit against the United States relating to the design of military equipment. Id. at 511-12                   12. Given Congress's decision to prohibit the second-guessing through tort litigation of the 13                   "technical, military, and even social considerations" involved in the procurement of military 14                   equipment, id. at 511, the Court held that tort plaintiffs should not be permitted to evade 15                   Congress's will by suing a government contractor instead of the United States:

17                   It makes little sense to insulate the Government against financial 18                   liability for the judgment that a particular feature of military 19                   equipment is necessary when the Government produces the 20                   equipment itself, but not when it contracts for the production.

21                   Id. at 512. Indeed, the Boyle Court held that permitting state tort suits would frustrate the 22                   FTCA's objectives because it would: (1) involve the judiciary in balancing "the trade-off 23                   between greater safety and greater combat effectiveness"; and (2) would ultimately place the 24                   financial burden of tort judgments on the United States because contractors would increase their 25                   contract prices to cover or insure against liability that Congress sought to avoid imposing on the 26                   United States government through explicit exceptions to the FTCA. Id. at 511-12.

1 For its part, the Ninth Circuit preempted tort suits against a defense contractor as being 2 inconsistent with the objectives of the FTCA. In Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1336-37, the court held that 3 state tort claims and federal claims under the Alien Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1350, asserted 4 against a weapons system manufacturer were preempted with respect to a suit filed by the 5 survivors of an Iranian passenger aircraft accidentally shot down by the United States Navy. The 6 Koohi court determined that permitting state and federal tort suits against the defense contractor 7 undermined the policies underlying Congress's enactment of the "combatant activities" 8 exception to the FTCA because allowing such claims "would create a duty of care where the 9 combatant activities exception is intended to ensure that none exists." Id. at 1337. Similarly, in 10 Bentzlin v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 833 F. Supp. 1486 (C.D. Cal. 1993), the court held that tort 11 claims against a defense contractor relating to deaths in the first Gulf War were preempted 12 because "[t]he federal interests that exist in wartime would be frustrated by allowing state tort 13 suits against government contractors that arise from wartime deaths even when plead as 14 manufacturing defect claims." Id. at 1492.

18 Preemption of Plaintiffs' state and federal tort claims is required because – as in Koohi – 19 prosecution of these claims frustrates operation of the combatants activities exception to the 20 FTCA. Plaintiffs cannot bring these claims directly against the United States because Congress 21 has determined through enactment of the combatant activities exception to the FTCA that 22 assertion of such tort claims is inappropriate. Indeed, perhaps the best proof that Plaintiffs' 23 claims are barred as against the United States is Plaintiffs' failure to name the United States as a 24 defendant even though virtually all of the factual allegations relate to the manner in which the 25 United States has waged the war in Iraq. By asserting claims against the private contractors that 26 have supported the United States' war effort in Iraq, Plaintiffs are seeking to evade the

1 congressional determination that allegations relating to the United States' combat activities 2 should not be the subject of tort litigation.

4 The combatant activities exception proscribes any claim "arising out of the combatant 5 activities of the military or naval forces, or the Coast Guard, during time of war." 28 U.S.C. § 6 2680(j). Plaintiffs' Complaint alleges supposed wrongdoing not only by Defendants, but by 7 elements of the United States military itself, in apprehending, detaining, and interrogating 8 persons identified by the United States for detention during its occupation of wartime Iraq. The 9 Ninth Circuit has held that the term "combatant activities" includes "not only physical violence, 10 but activities both necessary to and in direct connection with actual hostilities." Johnson v.
11 United States, 170 F.2d 767, 770 (9th Cir. 1948).<sup>7</sup> The detention of personnel in a war zone 12 clearly qualifies as an activity taken in direct connection with armed hostilities.

15 In addition, the activities alleged in Plaintiffs' Complaint are alleged to have occurred in 16 a "time of war." The phrase "time of war," as used in the combatant activities exception, does 17 not require a congressional declaration of war. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1333-34. The Koohi court 18 observed that the first Gulf War constituted a "time of war" for purposes of the FTCA,<sup>8</sup> and 19 squarely held that the United States' actions in flagging Kuwaiti ships during the Iran-Iraq war 20 constituted a "time of war" for the United States. Id. at 1334; see also Minns v. United States,

23 <sup>7</sup> In Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1333 n.5, the court reaffirmed the Johnson court's construction of 24 the term "combatant activities" and added that "the firing of a missile in perceived self-defense is 25 a quintessential combatant activity," even though the missile actually was fired at a civilian 26 passenger plane that posed no threat to the armed forces. Indeed, the Koohi court found that the 27 combatant activities exception to the FTCA required preemption of federal and state tort actions 28 against a contractor who manufactured a Navy vessel's weapons systems, id. at 1337, conduct far more removed from actual combat than CACI's provision of interrogation services in the Iraqi combat zone.

<sup>8</sup> Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1334 ("Yet no one can doubt that a state of war existed when our armed forces marched first into Kuwait and then into Iraq.").

1 974 F. Supp. 500, 506 (D. Md. 1997) (holding that the first Gulf War constituted a “time of war” 2 for purposes of the combatant activities exception), aff’d, 155 F.3d 445 (4th Cir. 1998); Clark v.
3 United States, 974 F. Supp. 895, 898 (E.D. Tex. 1996) (same); Rotko v. Abrams, 338 F. Supp.
4 46, 47-48 (D. Conn. 1971) (holding that Vietnam conflict constituted a “time of war” under the 5 combatant activities exception), aff’d, 455 F.2d 992 (2d Cir. 1972). Therefore, the United States’
6 invasion of Iraq certainly qualifies as a time of war for purposes of the combatant activities 7 exception to the FTCA.

10 Plaintiffs have asserted tort claims based on a supposed conspiracy between Defendants 11 and “certain United States officials.” Compl. ¶ 25. However, Congress has expressed its 12 determination, through the combatant activities exception, that claims involving the United 13 States’ combatant activities should not be permitted. The Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit 14 have held that “preemption [is] appropriate when imposition of liability on defense contractors 15 ‘will produce [the] same effect sought to be avoided by the FTCA exception.’” Koohi, 976 F.2d 16 at 1337 (quoting Boyle, 487 U.S. at 511); see also Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. at 1493 (“Congress 17 determined that the government should not be punished for mistakes made during war. This 18 purpose of the [combatant activities] exception similarly applies to government contractors . . .
19 .).”<sup>9</sup> Because allowing tort suits involving combatant activities to go forward against defense
20 contractors would invite judicial second-guessing of the United States’ war-making decisions
23

24
25 <sup>9</sup> The Bentzlin court also noted that tort law was not necessary to punish and deter 26 government contractors for wrongful conduct relating to combat activities because “[t]he United 27 States government is in the best position to monitor wrongful activity by contractors, either by 28 terminating their contracts or through criminal prosecution.” Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. at 1493.
The United States is performing this oversight as we speak, oversight that the CACI Defendants welcome, with several government investigations either in progress or completed with respect to allegations of detainee abuse in Iraqi prisons.

1 and ultimately would increase the United States' defense costs through higher contract prices to 2 reflect contractors' exposure to tort liability, see Boyle, 487 U.S. at 511-12,<sup>10</sup> Plaintiffs' federal 3 and state tort claims are preempted as inconsistent with the purpose of the combatant activities 4 exception to the FTCA.<sup>11</sup>

6 D. Plaintiffs' RICO Claims Fail as a Matter of Law

7 In a reckless effort to shoehorn their claims within the narrow confines of the RICO 8 statute, Plaintiffs repeatedly have made up facts or hidden behind the shroud of "on information 9 and belief" when confronted with myriad obstacles to asserting a RICO claim. Even after 10 employing such disingenuous tactics, Plaintiffs' RICO claims remain patently lacking as a matter 11 of law. As described in greater detail below, Plaintiffs' RICO claims fail to allege the requisite 12

14 <sup>10</sup> Or, perhaps even more likely, the United States would find private contractors 15 unwilling to accept contracts that might place private contractors in a role supporting the United 16 States military in a combat zone, as private contractors would be inviting targets for plaintiffs 17 who will sue the contractors in an attempt to recover for the war-making decisions of the United 18 States military, as in the present action. In an analogous context, one court in this Circuit has 19 observed that "[e]xposing government contractors to tort liability . . . would place undue pressure 20 on manufacturers to act too cautiously, even when the national interest would be better served by expedient production than defect-free weapons." Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. at 1493. The same reasoning applies to the provision of interrogator services needed by the United States military in a combat environment.

21 <sup>11</sup> In addition to the combatant activities exception, the discretionary function exception 22 to the FTCA would apply here as well. See Boyle, 487 U.S. at 511 ("We think that the selection 23 of the appropriate design for military equipment to be used by our Armed Forces is assuredly a 24 discretionary function within the meaning of [the discretionary function exception to the FTCA]."). Similarly, the Supreme Court recently clarified that the "foreign country" exception 25 to the FTCA retains sovereign immunity for all tort claims involving injuries occurring outside 26 the United States, regardless of whether conduct within the United States is a proximate cause of such injuries. Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 124 S. Ct. 2739, 2754 (2004). Under the Ninth 27 Circuit's reasoning in Koohi, Plaintiffs' tort claims against Defendants are preempted because, in 28 addition to the combatant activities exception, both the discretionary function and foreign country exceptions to FTCA liability bar tort claims by Plaintiffs' against the United States. See Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1337 ("[P]reemption [is] appropriate when imposition of liability on defense contractors 'will produce [the] same effect sought to be avoided by the FTCA exception.'").

1 economic injury, pattern of racketeering activity, and the existence of an enterprise. Therefore, 2 the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' RICO claims.

3 Plaintiffs assert civil RICO claims on behalf of three named RICO Class Plaintiffs and a 4 putative RICO subclass. In support of their claims, Plaintiffs allege in their RICO Case
5 Statement ("RCS")<sup>12</sup> that that, incident to arrest, Defendants confiscated cash, gold, and jewelry 6 belonging to the RICO Class Plaintiffs and in addition caused damage to the personal residences 7 of two of them. RCS ¶¶ 4, 15. However, there is no allegation that the CACI Defendants had 8 any role in arresting any of the Plaintiffs, or in seizing or damaging their property. Rather, 9 Plaintiffs allege that the CACI Defendants conducted interrogations upon detainees after they 10 had already been arrested by the United States military. RCS ¶ 5(f).

11 RICO does not provide recovery for the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries to their business or 12 property. See Oscar v. University Students Co-operative Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785-86 (9th Cir.
13 1992). Courts have repeatedly rejected attempts to use civil RICO as a vehicle for personal 14 injury or other tort claims, noting that "RICO was 'intended to combat organized crime, not to 15 provide a federal cause of action for treble damages and attorneys fees to every tort plaintiff.'" Rodriguez v. Topps Co., Inc., 104 F. Supp. 2d 1224, 1125 (S.D. Cal. 2000) (quoting Oscar, 965 16 F.2d at 786). For the reasons stated below, this Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' RICO claims for 17 lack of standing and for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

18 1. Plaintiffs Lack Standing to Bring a Civil RICO Claim

19 RICO's statutory standing requirement for a civil plaintiff is unambiguous: a plaintiff 20 must suffer an injury to his "business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this

1 chapter." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (2000). "The plaintiff only has standing if, and can recover to the 2 extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the 3 [§ 1962] violation . . . ." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc. 473 U.S. 479, 496-497 (1985) 4 (emphasis added). Furthermore, the injury must be directly and proximately caused by the 5 defendant's § 1962 violation. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protections Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 6 268 (1992). Here, Plaintiffs have suffered no injury to their business or property as a result of 7 the conduct they claim that Defendants committed. Therefore, they lack standing to assert a 8 RICO claim against Defendants.

11 Plaintiffs allege a violation of § 1962(a). See RCS ¶¶ 1, 11. Section 1962(a) provides in 12 pertinent part as follows:

13 It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income 14 derived . . . from a pattern of racketeering activity . . . in which 15 such person has participated as a principal . . . to use or invest . . .
16 any part of such income, or the proceeds . . . in acquisition . . . or 17 the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged 18 in interstate or foreign commerce.

19 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a) (emphasis). In order to assert a claim under § 1962(a), a plaintiff must 20 "allege facts tending to show that he or she was injured by the use or investment of the 21 racketeering income," rather than from the alleged predicate acts themselves. Nugget 22 Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 981 F.2d 429, 437 (9th Cir. 1992) (emphasis 23 added); Simon v. Value Behavioral Health, Inc., 208 F.3d 1073, 1083 (9th Cir. 2000). Plaintiffs 24 allege no such facts, instead claiming that the supposed § 1962(a) injury flowed to "competitors" 25 of Defendants and "others in commerce," and implicitly, the United States taxpayers. See RCS 26 ¶ 10. Accordingly, Plaintiffs lack standing to bring a claim for violation of § 1962(a).

27 Plaintiffs also allege a violation of § 1962(c). See RCS ¶¶ 1, 13. That subsection 28 provides as follows:

1 It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with 2 any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, 3 interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly 4 or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering or collection of an unlawful debt.

5 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (emphasis added). To “conduct” the affairs of a RICO enterprise, the 6 defendant “must have some part in directing those affairs.” Reeves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S.
7 170, 179 (1993) (approving an “operation or management” test) (emphasis added).<sup>13</sup> Plaintiffs 8 have no standing to assert a violation of § 1962(c) because they show no injury to their business 9 or property flowing from the CACI Defendants’ supposed conduct of the enterprise 10 (“Enterprise”) that Plaintiffs describe. See RCS ¶ 6.

12 Plaintiffs allege an Enterprise that obtains “‘intelligence’ from detainees by both lawful 13 and unlawful means.” Id. ¶ 6(b). Plaintiffs further allege murder, attempted murder, threats to 14 murder, threats of death, kidnapping, various types of sexual assault, and the recording, 15 transportation, or importation of obscene materials, as predicate acts supposedly attributable to 16 members of the “Enterprise.” See RCS ¶ 5(b). Not a single one of these alleged predicate acts is 17 alleged to have caused any injury to RICO Plaintiffs’ property or business. See RCS ¶ 4. The 18 only alleged injury to the RICO Plaintiffs’ property or business occurred incident to arrest, not 19 during the interrogation process. See id. Thus, Plaintiffs have no standing to assert a claim 20 against any of the CACI Defendants for a violation of § 1962(c).

25 <sup>13</sup> Indeed, other than the vague and general assertion that “[t]he Enterprise is managed 26 and operated by executives from the CACI Defendants, Defendant Titan, and by certain 27 government officials, including military officials,” see RCS ¶ 6(b), Plaintiffs do not even bother 28 to allege “conduct” of the Enterprise’s affairs. It is clear that Plaintiffs offer no facts to support the “conduct” allegation, and that such pleading fails to meet the minimum fact pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8.

1 A plaintiff cannot sue under RICO for injuries from a RICO conspiracy unless he or she 2 can show an injury to business or property that resulted from an overt act of racketeering. Beck
3 v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 507 (2000). Because Plaintiffs show no injury to business or property 4 flowing from the alleged violations of either § 1962(a) or § 1962(c), Plaintiffs cannot show any 5 injury to business or property flowing from a RICO conspiracy and, therefore, Plaintiffs lack 6 standing to claim a violation of § 1962(d). Because Plaintiffs fail to allege any injury to their 7 business or property as a result of conduct constituting a § 1962 violation, Plaintiffs' RICO 8 claims must be dismissed. See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496.

11 2. Plaintiffs Fail to Plead The Elements of Any RICO Violation

12 In addition, even if Plaintiffs had the requisite standing, they still have failed to state a 13 legally cognizable RICO claim. Pleading any violation of § 1962 requires Plaintiffs to allege 14 facts showing (i) that Defendants engaged in (ii) multiple acts of "racketeering activity," (iii) that 15 constitute a "pattern" (iv) that directly and proximately caused injury to Plaintiffs' business or 16 property, and (v) the existence of a "RICO enterprise" that is distinct from the Defendants and 17 distinct from any criminal conspiracy. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961(1), (3), (4) & (5); 1964(c); 18 Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496-97; Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268; Brady v. Dairy Fresh Prods., Inc. 974 19 F.2d 1149, 1152 (9th Cir. 1992). Here, Plaintiffs fail to establish any of the required elements to 20 state a cognizable RICO claim.
21

23 a. Plaintiffs Fail to Plead Any Predicate Act of "Racketeering 24 Activity"

25 To allege a RICO claim, Plaintiffs must plead multiple predicate acts of "racketeering 26 activity." See 18 U.S.C. § 1962. In their attempt to plead predicate acts, Plaintiffs allege that 27 Defendants violated several specific sections of the California Penal Code and several specific 28 sections of Title 18 of the United States Code, as well as "Article 23 of the Transitional

1 Administrative Law, and Iraqi laws in force under the Coalitional Provisional Authority.” RCS 2 ¶ 5(a). Racketeering activity, however, is expressly defined and delimited by statute, and 3 Plaintiffs fail to plead within the strictures of the statute. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). Plaintiffs’ failure 4 to plead even a single act of racketeering activity is fatal to all of their RICO claims.

6 Certain common law crimes, such as murder, kidnapping, robbery, and threats of the 7 same, as well as violations of state statutes prohibiting dealing in obscene matter may qualify as 8 RICO predicate acts, but only if they are “chargeable under State law and punishable by 9 imprisonment for more than one year.” 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(A) (emphasis added); see also 18 10 U.S.C. § 1961(2) (defining “State”). Yet, while Plaintiffs cite the California Penal Code, they do 11 not even attempt to establish that any of the supposed misconduct that occurred in Iraq is, in fact, 12 chargeable under California law. Furthermore, Plaintiffs do not plead as much as a single 13 element of any alleged California law violation; they make no attempt to correlate any specific 14 set of facts with any specific California statute, and in most cases do not even identify an alleged 15 perpetrator. In no instance do Plaintiffs provide any facts connecting any of the CACI 16 Defendants with any of the acts that allegedly violate the California Penal Code and qualify as 17 predicate acts under RICO. See RCS ¶ 5(b).<sup>14</sup>
20

21 Violations of 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251, 2252, 2260, and 2315 also may qualify as RICO
22 predicate acts, if the alleged facts establish the elements of the offense. See RCS ¶ 5(a). Here, 23 however, it is obvious from a mere reading of the statutes cited that Plaintiffs do not allege facts 24 that establish the elements of any of these offenses. See RCS ¶ 5(b). Again, Plaintiffs do not

27 <sup>14</sup> Indeed, it would raise serious due process concerns if the Court were to hold that the 28 California Penal Code applies extraterritorially to conduct allegedly committed in a foreign country by non-California residents against non-California residents.

1 correlate any specific set of facts with any specific federal prohibition, nor plead a single fact 2 connecting the CACI Defendants with any alleged predicate act. See RCS ¶ 5(b).

4 Other alleged violations of specific statutes are baseless because they cannot qualify as 5 RICO predicate acts under any circumstances. For instance, the offenses prohibited by Cal.
6 Penal Code §§ 261 - 269 and 422.1 are simply not encompassed by RICO as predicate acts, and 7 the offense prohibited by Cal. Penal Code § 422 has an authorized punishment that does not 8 exceed one year, and therefore does not qualify as a RICO predicate act. See 18 U.S.C.
9 § 1961(1)(A); Cal. Penal Code § 261 - 269, 422, 422.1 (West 2000 & Supp. 2004). In addition, 10 Plaintiffs' allegations of violations of the penal laws of Iraq, and the laws in force in Iraq under 11 the Coalition Provisional Authority are not cognizable as RICO predicate acts, because they do 12 not qualify as "chargeable under State law." See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(2) (defining "State," which 13 term does not encompass foreign sovereigns or multinational governing coalitions).

15 Plaintiffs' attempt to plead predicate acts falls far below the standards required by Rules 16 8 and 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P., and cannot survive this motion to dismiss. See, e.g., Nugget 17 Hydroelectric, 981 F.2d at 437-38 (dismissing claim where plaintiff's RICO allegations were 18 "general, conclusory and vague"); In re MDC Holdings Securities Litig., Civ. No. 89-0090-E, 19 1991 WL 537515, at *7 (S.D. Cal. July 2, 1991) (dismissing RICO conspiracy claim for 20 conclusory pleading of elements without supporting facts). In sum, Plaintiffs do not sufficiently 21 plead any RICO violation and accordingly, all the RICO claims must be dismissed.

24 b. Plaintiffs Fail to Plead a Pattern of Racketeering Activity

25 RICO Plaintiffs must allege facts that establish a "pattern" of racketeering activity. See 26 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962; 1961(5). Given that Plaintiffs fail to plead even a single predicate act of

1 racketeering activity, they necessarily fail to plead a “pattern” of racketeering activity. In 2 addition, Plaintiffs fail to plead a “pattern” in other important respects.

3 To plead a pattern, Plaintiffs must establish that multiple predicate acts (i) are related and 4 (ii) that they constitute continuity of racketeering activity or its threat. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5); 5 Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n. 14; H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tele. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 236, 240-
6 42 (1989); Howard v. Am. Online Inc., 208 F.3d 741, 749 (9th Cir. 2000). Isolated or sporadic 7 wrongdoing is not cognizable under RICO. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14 (quoting S. Rep. No.
8 91-617, at 158) (emphasis added). Plaintiffs offer no facts capable of supporting a reasonable 9 inference that the alleged predicate acts – if they even qualified as predicate acts under RICO – 10 were anything other than isolated or sporadic.

11 In assessing continuity, courts have recognized that a pattern may be either close-ended 12 or open-ended. See Howard, 208 F.3d at 750 (quoting H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 241, 242). A 13 closed-ended pattern consists of related predicate acts over a substantial period of time.
14 “Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct 15 do not satisfy this requirement: Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal 16 conduct.” H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242. Alternatively, an open-ended pattern requires the real and 17 present threat of continuing racketeering activity. Id. at 241.

18 Plaintiffs try to cover all bets with the naked assertion that “[t]he predicate acts of 19 murder, attempted murder and threats of murder” commenced “as early as January 2002,” and 20 continue to date, i.e., July 30, 2004. See RCS ¶ 5(f). Plaintiffs’ unprincipled attempt to plead to 21 the requirements of the law is betrayed not only by their own pleading, but by the historical (and 22 indisputable) facts alleged. According to the Plaintiffs’ list of predicate acts, the first alleged 23 predicate act occurred in May 2003, not January 2002. See RCS ¶ 5(b). Moreover, by
26 27
28

1 definition, it is impossible that any alleged predicate act of racketeering affecting the RICO
2 Plaintiffs or the proposed RICO Class occurred prior to April 2003. Plaintiffs define the putative 3 Class, including the RICO subclass, as being comprised of persons who were mistreated while 4 being detained “subsequent to the fall of the Hussein regime.” SAC ¶¶ 2, 12, 13, 36 (a), (b), (c).
5 It is a widely known historical fact that the Hussein regime did not fall until early April 2003; 6 Baghdad fell on April 9, marking the collapse of the Hussein government. See War Against 7 Iraq: Baghdad Collapses, San Diego Union-Tribune, Apr. 10, 2003, at A7, 2003 WL 6577208
8 (“Saddam Hussein’s rule in Baghdad ended yesterday.”). Thus, by their own class definition, 9 Plaintiffs’ allegations of predicate acts are limited to events taking place in or after April 2003.
10

12 Plaintiffs offer no factual allegations in support of their assertion that the supposed 13 racketeering activities continue to date. See RCS ¶ 5(f). Under the prevailing circumstances, 14 with the intense scrutiny of multiple ongoing investigations by various governmental and non-15 governmental agencies, and pending criminal proceedings against specific individuals, in the 16 absence of factual support, this assertion cannot be taken as anything other than conclusory, 17 baseless, and irresponsible. It should be discounted accordingly.

19 The specific factual allegations point to the conclusion that the complained-of conduct is 20 exactly what the Supreme Court said did not constitute a “pattern” for RICO purposes:
21 “Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct 22 do not satisfy this [pattern] requirement.” H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242 (emphasis added). Thus, 23 Plaintiffs fail to allege a pattern of racketeering activity as required to support any RICO claim.

26 c. Plaintiffs Fail to Show a § 1962 Violation Directly and 27 Proximately Caused Injury to Plaintiffs’ Business or Property

28 A RICO plaintiff must demonstrate some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268. Plaintiffs do not demonstrate any causal 1 link between a violation of § 1962 and any injury to the RICO Plaintiffs' property or business.

2 Plaintiffs do not show that they have been directly and proximately injured in their business 3 either (i) by the Defendants' investment of racketeering proceeds in an enterprise or the use of 4 racketeering proceeds to acquire an interest in, manage, or operate, an enterprise, or (ii) by the 5 Defendants' conduct of the Enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. In fact, 6 Plaintiffs do not even demonstrate that any of the alleged predicate acts, see RCS ¶ 5(b), caused 7 any injury at all to RICO Plaintiffs' property or business, see RCS ¶ 4. Thus, by a wide margin, 8 Plaintiffs fail to establish that a violation of § 1962 (which entails demonstrating far more than 9 the commission of a single qualifying predicate act) directly and proximately caused an injury to 10 a RICO Plaintiffs' business or property. The absence of any element of causation is fatal to 11 Plaintiffs' RICO claims.

14 d. Plaintiffs Fail to Plead an "Enterprise"

15 To plead a RICO violation, Plaintiffs must allege facts to show the existence of a RICO 16 "enterprise." See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962 & 1961(4). An association-in-fact that serves as the RICO 17 defendant's tool may constitute a RICO enterprise. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4); United States v.
18 Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 581-82 (1981); Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 19 162, 164 (2001). Such a RICO enterprise must (i) be comprised of persons associating for a 20 common purpose of engaging in a particular course of conduct, (ii) function as a continuing unit 21 rather than on an ad hoc basis, and (iii) have an ascertainable structure for decision-making and 22 for controlling and directing its affairs. Turkette, 452 U.S. at 538; Chang v. Chen, 80 F.3d 1293, 23 1299 (9th Cir. 1996). Further, such an enterprise must be "an entity that is separate and apart 24 from the pattern of [racketeering] activity in which it engages," Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, and "a 25 'conspiracy is not an enterprise for the purposes of RICO,'" Simon, 208 F.3d at 1083 (quoting 26
28

1 Chang, 80 F.3d at 1300). Plaintiffs' allegations, largely devoid of specific facts, do not satisfy 2 these requirements and therefore Plaintiffs' RICO claims fail.

3         While alleging that "Defendant Titan and the CACI Defendants are corporate entities 4 that, together with certain government officials, comprise the Enterprise," Plaintiffs do not flesh 5 out this skeleton pleading with facts. See RCS ¶ 6(c). Required to describe the purpose and 6 function of the enterprise, Plaintiffs allege, implausibly, that the "central purpose of the 7 Enterprise is to increase the United States' demand for the non-governmental professionals to 8 assist the United States' intelligence gathering efforts." RCS ¶ 6(b); see also RCS ¶ 5(g).
9 Directed to describe the structure of the enterprise, Plaintiffs completely miss the point, offering 10 a description of the three-person interrogation teams, see RCS ¶ 6(b), and failing to provide any 11 description whatsoever of the structure of the management and operation of the alleged 12 Enterprise entity, the affairs of which Plaintiffs must show are conducted "through a pattern of 13 racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). Plaintiffs' bald assertions notwithstanding, 14 Plaintiffs do not in any way describe – with facts – the very existence of the alleged Enterprise or 15 its structure, management or operation.

19         To establish that the alleged Enterprise is distinct from the criminal activity alleged, 20 Plaintiffs repeatedly assert that the Enterprise conducts legitimate as well as illegal business. See 21 RCS ¶¶ 6(b), 7. However, the only legitimate business Plaintiffs posit is exactly the same 22 "business" as the "business" supposedly conducted illegally. Plaintiffs' own allegations 23 demonstrate the circularity and hypothetical nature of their pleading:

26                 The Enterprise conducts legitimate business in Iraq, other foreign 27                 countries, and in the United States. For example, discovery will 28                 likely reveal that in some instances the Enterprise conducted certain interrogations in Iraq in a lawful manner.

RCS ¶ 6(b).

1 The Enterprise operated both legally and illegally to obtain 2 intelligence from detainees . . . . To the extent discovery reveals 3 that an Enterprise [interrogation] “team” conducted an 4 interrogation in a lawful manner . . . the Enterprise’s daily 5 activities may have been lawful. However, to the extent an 6 Enterprise “team” conducted an interrogation in an unlawful 7 manner, the Enterprise is part of the Torture Conspiracy.

8 RCS ¶ 8. Extending this logic then, presumably, on the days a member of the team participated 9 in lawful interrogations, he or she was part of the legitimate business of the Enterprise and on the 10 other days, part of the Torture Conspiracy. Plaintiffs do not describe an Enterprise that is distinct 11 from the criminal activity in which it engages; they merely allege that the persons acting for the 12 alleged Enterprise sometimes act lawfully and sometimes act unlawfully in carrying out the 13 Enterprise’s business.

14 Based on the facts alleged, it is clear that the alleged Enterprise is no more than a 15 hypothetical construct. Plaintiffs allege no facts to show that any Enterprise actually exists or 16 ever did. The only fact reflected in the allegations attempting to establish the existence and 17 operation of a RICO enterprise is the fact that the law requires such pleading and the Plaintiffs 18 conjured up a hypothetical construct.

20 e. Plaintiffs Fail to Plead a Conspiracy Pursuant to 18 U.S.C.
21 § 1962(d)

22 It is unlawful for “any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection 23 (a), (b), or (c) of [§ 1962].” 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). Plaintiff’s failure to plead the requisite 24 elements of a substantive violation of RICO necessarily means that Plaintiffs cannot successfully 25 plead a conspiracy to violate RICO, and Plaintiffs’ RICO conspiracy claim fails on that account.

26 See Simon, 208 F.3d at 1084; Wagh v. Metris Direct, Inc., 363 F.3d 821, 831 (9th Cir. 2003)

1 Even if Plaintiffs had sufficiently pleaded a substantive violation of RICO, the conspiracy claim 2 fails for other reasons.

3           “To state a claim for conspiracy to violate RICO, ‘the complaint must allege some factual 4 basis for the finding of a conscious agreement among the defendants.’” Sebastian Int’l, Inc. v.
5 Russolillo, 186 F. Supp. 2d 1055, 1068 (C.D. Cal. 2000) (quoting Hecht v. Commerce Clearing 6 House, 897 F.2d 21, 26 n.4 (2d Cir. 1990) (emphasis added)). Plaintiffs must plead facts 7 demonstrating that the partners in the criminal plan agreed to pursue the same objective by 8 criminal means, which, if executed, would satisfy all of the elements of a substantive RICO 9 violation. Salinas v. United States, 522 U.S. 52, 63, 65 (1997).

10           Plaintiffs fail completely to allege facts in support of their conspiracy claim. Plaintiffs 11 assert that the Corporate Defendants recruited nationally, and that the job postings sought males 12 willing to work in a harsh environment as part of a civil-military team in an unstructured 13 environment” and “revealed” that applicants “must undergo a favorable U.S. Army 14 Counterintelligence screening interview.” See RCS ¶ 14. In particular, Plaintiffs allege that the 15 CACI Defendants recruited persons for the position of Intelligent Analyst, whose duties were 16 expected to include “[i]nterfac[ing] with . . . [other] intelligence organizations to fully prepare 17 interrogation team [sic] for exploitation of detainees.” Id. Plaintiffs further allege that civilian 18 contractors did in fact work with military personnel to conduct interrogations, and that some of 19 the interrogations supposedly involved violations of law. See id. These so-called facts are 20 simply incapable of supporting an inference of a conspiracy attributable to the CACI Defendants.

21           For all of these reasons, the Court should not countenance Plaintiffs’ obvious effort to 22 contort their claims to fit within a RICO statute that is not intended to encompass Plaintiffs’ 23 claims. As such, the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs’ RICO claims.

1           E. Plaintiffs' Alien Tort Claims (Counts III-IX) Must Be Dismissed

2           Plaintiffs' claims asserted under the Alien Tort Claims Act ("ATCA"), 28 U.S.C. § 1350, 3 must be dismissed for several reasons.

4           First, because Plaintiffs seek reparations for injuries supposedly inflicted upon them as 5 part of the United States' prosecution of the war in Iraq, Plaintiffs' claims present a 6 nonjusticiable political question. See Section II.B, supra.

7           Second, Plaintiffs' state and federal tort claims, including their ATCA claims, are 8 preempted as inconsistent with the combatant activities exception to the Federal Tort Claims Act, 9 28 U.S.C. § 2680(j). Indeed, in Koohi, the Ninth Circuit specifically dismissed tort claims 10 brought against a defense contractor under ATCA as preempted where the same claims would be 11 barred by the combatant activities exception to the FTCA if asserted directly against the United 12 States. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1336 ("We have also previously held that those exceptions [to FTCA 13 liability] may preempt federal statutory tort actions.").

14           Third, even if claims asserted under ATCA were neither preempted nor presented 15 nonjusticiable political questions, Plaintiffs' ATCA claims still fail as a matter of law because, 16 for the reasons set forth below, Plaintiffs' fail to satisfy the strict standards for establishing a new 17 private tort action under ATCA.

18                           1. ATCA Permits Assertion of New Tort Claims Only in Narrowly 19                           Prescribed Circumstances

20           In Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 124 S. Ct. 2739, 2762 (2004), the Court held that ATCA "is 21 a jurisdictional statute creating no new causes of action." Rather, ATCA "enabled federal courts 22 to hear claims in a very limited category defined by the law of nations and recognized at 23 common law." Id. at 2754. Indeed, at the time Congress enacted ATCA, the common law 24 recognized only three violations of the law of nations as being both definite and actionable by
27
28

1 private parties under ATCA: (1) offenses against ambassadors; (2) violations of safe conduct; 2 and (3) individual actions arising out of piracy or prize captures. Id. at 2759 (noting that “some,
3 but few, torts in violation of the law of nations were understood to be within the common law”); 4 see also id. (“[O]ffences against this law [of nations] are principally incident to whole states or 5 nations’ and not individuals seeking relief in court.” (quoting 4 Blackstone’s Commentaries

8 Thus, the Supreme Court counseled that courts should exercise “judicial caution when 9 considering the kinds of individual claims that might implement the jurisdiction conferred by 10 [ATCA].” Id. at 2762. The Court identified five factors that should cause federal courts to 11 exercise restraint in considering whether to open federal courts for private rights of action based

- 14 (1) At the time of ATCA’s enactment, the common law was perceived as the 15 process of discovering preexisting law rather than making new law.
- 16 (2) The federal courts’ practice “to look for legislative guidance before 17 exercising innovative authority over substantive law.”
- 18 (3) The fact that the Court “has recently and repeatedly said that a decision to 19 create a private right of action is one better left to legislative judgment in 20 the great majority of cases.”
- 21 (4) “[T]he potential implications for the foreign relations of the United States 22 of recognizing such causes should make courts particularly wary of 23 impinging on the discretion of the Legislative and Executive Branches in 24 managing foreign affairs.”
- 25 (5) The absence of a “congressional mandate to seek out and define new and 26 debatable violations of the law of nations, and modern indications of 27 congressional understanding of the judicial role in the field have not 28 affirmatively encouraged greater judicial scrutiny.”

Id. at 2762-63. Indeed, the Sosa Court emphasized that these five factors “argue for great caution in adapting the law of nations to private rights.” Id. at 2764.

1 Claims arising out of the manner in which the United States wages an external war are 2 particularly inappropriate candidates for the creation of private causes of action under ATCA.
3 Claims arising out of war have always been resolved on a government-to-government basis, and 4 allowing private causes of action would unreasonably infringe on the political branches' 5 constitutional role to establish American foreign policy. Therefore, the Court should not open 6 the doors of the federal courts for the resolution of wartime reparations claims through private 7 litigation.

10 a. Congress Has Expressed an Intent Not To Have Wartime 11 Claims Litigated in Federal Tort Actions

12 Two of the five considerations identified by the Sosa Court as requiring judicial caution 13 before recognizing private rights of action under ATCA are based on the preeminent role of 14 Congress in establishing federal causes of action. First, the Sosa Court observed that federal 15 courts generally “look for legislative guidance before exercising innovative authority over 16 substantive law.” Id. at 2762-63. Second, the Court noted an absence of any mandate from 17 Congress to recognize and define new causes of action under ATCA. Id. at 2763. With respect 18 to private tort claims arising out of the manner in which the United States has prosecuted a war, 19 congressional intent could not be clearer that such claims should not be resolved through private 20 causes of action.

22 As described in greater detail in Section II.C, supra, one of the very few exceptions to 23 Congress’s waiver of sovereign immunity under the FTCA is the “combatant activities” 24 exception, which continues to prohibit private tort suits against the United States for claims 25 “arising out of the combatant activities of the military or naval forces, or the Coast Guard, during 26 time of war.” 28 U.S.C. § 2680(j). The combatant activities exception evinces Congress’s 27 determination that claims for injuries suffered in wartime are not the appropriate subject of 28

1 private tort litigation. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has explicitly recognized this principle in 2 holding that claims asserted under ATCA against a defense contractor were preempted by the 3 combatant activities exception to FTCA, as Congress's determination that such tort claims 4 should not proceed would be undermined if claimants could instead file suit against defense
5 contractors. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1336-37. Consistent with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Koohi, 6 the Court should respect Congress's determination that private rights of action should not be 7 recognized for alleged injuries arising out of the manner in which the United States conducts 8 war. See also Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2765 (noting that Congress can remove causes of action from 9 ATCA jurisdiction "explicitly, or implicitly by treaties or statutes that occupy the field").

12 b. Recognizing Private Causes For Wartime Injuries Would 13 Reverse Two Centuries of Law to the Contrary

14 Since the earliest days of the Republic, claims of injuries as a result of the conduct of war 15 have belonged to the nation of which the injured party is a citizen, and could not be asserted 16 through a private cause of action. See Ware, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) at 230 ("[T]he restitution of, or 17 compensation for, British property confiscated, or extinguished, during the war, by any of the 18 United States, could only be provided for by the treaty of peace; . . . they could not be agitated 19 after the treaty, by the British government, much less by her subjects in courts of justice."); 20 Perrin, 4 Ct. Cl. at 544; Frumkin, 129 F. Supp. 2d at 376 ("Claims for war reparations arising out 21 of World War II have always been managed on a governmental level."); Iwanowa, 67 F. Supp.
22 2d at 485 ("The executive branch has always addressed claims for reparations as claims between 23 governments."); Burger-Fischer, 65 F. Supp. 2d at 273 ("Under international law claims for 24 compensation by individuals harmed by war-related activity belong exclusively to the state of 25 which the individual is a citizen."); Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United 26 States § 713 cmt. a (1987) ("In principle, the responsibility of a state [for injuries to nationals of

1 other countries] is to the state of the alien's nationality and gives that state a claim against the 2 offending state. The claim derives from injury to an individual, but once espoused it is the

5 The discretion to resolve wartime reparations claims historically has been the 6 unquestioned prerogative of the political branches, and has been accomplished on a government-7 to-government level. As a result, it would inappropriately impinge on the political branches' 8 exclusive role in resolving wars and setting the United States' foreign policy for the judiciary to 9 disrupt two centuries of foreign policy norms by allowing private litigants to circumvent this 10 procedure by asserting claims under ATCA. See Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2762-63.

12 2. Plaintiffs Have Not Properly Exhausted Their Remedies

13 The Sosa Court commented favorably on an argument presented by the European 14 Commission that "basic principles of international law require that before asserting a claim in a 15 foreign forum, the claimant must have exhausted any remedies available in the domestic legal 16 system, and perhaps in other for a such as international claims tribunals." Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 17 2766 n.21. Thus, even if Plaintiffs' claims belonged to them and not to the Iraqi government, 18 they would have to demonstrate an exhaustion of remedies before being permitted to proceed 19 with their claims against Defendants. In the absence of evidence that they have exhausted the 20 administrative remedies available to them, including resolution of any administrative claim 21 against the United States, the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' ATCA claims.<sup>15</sup>

26
27 <sup>15</sup> The reason why Plaintiffs made no effort to pursue administrative claims is clear, as 28 plaintiffs' counsel filed this suit not in a good-faith effort to obtain recovery, but rather for the sole purpose of obtaining discovery from the United States concerning its activities in Iraq, with Defendants being mere pawns in plaintiffs' counsel's political crusade.

1                   3.     Plaintiffs' ATCA Claims Lack the Required Definiteness

2             In Sosa, the Supreme Court made clear that the only violations of the law of nations that 3 conceivably could qualify as a cognizable tort under ATCA are those that “rest on a norm of 4 international character accepted by the civilized world and defined with a specificity comparable 5 to” the few torts understood as authorized under ATCA at the time of the statute’s enactment.
6 Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2761-62. Plaintiffs have not made any effort to define the scope of the seven 7 new “law of nations” torts that they ask this Court to recognize as being not only actionable, but 8 actionable in a wartime setting. This requirement of definiteness is a necessary component of 9 any ATCA cause of action, and Plaintiffs’ failure to offer a defined scope of their proffered tort 10 claims requires their dismissal. Id.

11             Moreover, even if Plaintiffs bothered to offer a defined scope of their new ATCA claims 12 (and even if wartime reparations claims were actionable under ATCA), Plaintiffs’ claims cannot 13 overcome the considerations announced by the Supreme Court in Sosa as requiring caution in 14 recognizing new tort claims under ATCA. For example, with respect to Count III (alleging 15 “Torture” as an ATCA claim), Congress already has weighed in on the extent to which claims of 16 torture should be cognizable federal tort claims in enacting the Torture Victim Protection Act of 17 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-256, 106 Stat. 73. In that statute, Congress created a private cause of 18 action for certain victims of torture, but only for victims of torture under color of law “of any 19 foreign nation.” Id. § 2(a)(1). Thus, in likely recognition that Congress and the Executive were 20 the proper entities to resolve any claims that torture occurred under color of United States law, 21 Congress expressly excluded such claims from the private cause of action it created. Given the
23
25 26 27
28

1 Congress, Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2762-63, the Court should respect Congress's judgment in 2 establishing the scope of cognizable claims of torture.<sup>16</sup>

3 Plaintiffs' other ATCA causes of action are equally flawed. Plaintiffs' "Cruel, Inhuman, 4 or Degrading Treatment" claim (Count V) has already been rejected by a court in this Circuit as 5 failing to state a cognizable ATCA claim. See Sarei, 221 F. Supp. 2d at 1163. With respect to 6 Count VI (Enforced Disappearance), this claim is not only vague and undefined, but not one of 7 the Plaintiffs alleges facts relating in any way to this cause of action. The Supreme Court 8 already has rejected "Arbitrary Detention" (Count VII) as a cognizable claim under ATCA. See 9 Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2768-69. "Crimes Against Humanity" (Count IX) is a cause of action that 10 involves the persecution of an entire nationality, religion or other definable population, Sarei, 11 221 F. Supp. 2d at 1149, and Plaintiffs have not alleged any facts supporting such a claim against 12 Defendants. Plaintiffs' "War Crimes" cause of action (Count VIII) is vague and undefined in the 13 extreme, and apparently purports to create a tort action for the violation of any treaty relating in 14 any way to the conduct of war. SAC ¶¶ 237-38. Thus, even if ATCA could create tort actions 15 out of war reparation claims, in derogation of two centuries of American law, the specific claims 16 asserted here are insufficiently defined or otherwise inappropriate candidates for the creation of a 17 private cause of action under ATCA.

20 21 22 F. Plaintiffs' "Constitutional" Causes of Action (Counts XI, XII, and XIII) Fail
23 to State a Claim

24 Plaintiffs, as noncitizens, allege that Defendants – private parties all – somehow violated 25 their constitutional rights under the Fourth, Fifth, Eighth, and (perhaps most implausibly)

27 28

<sup>16</sup> Similarly, Count III asserts a claim based on "summary execution." Again, in enacting the Torture Victims Protection Act of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-256, 106 Stat. 73, Congress limited causes of action relating to "extrajudicial killing" to acts undertaken with the actual or apparent authority of "any foreign nation." Id. § 2(a)(2).

1 Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Like the other claims in Plaintiffs' 2 complaint, these so-called constitutional claims present nonjusticiable political questions and 3 should be dismissed on that basis. See Section II.B, supra. Beyond their patent nonjusticiability, 4 these claims fail as a matter of law for several reasons. First, aliens do not have rights under the 5 United States Constitution for acts occurring outside of the United States. Second, Plaintiffs' 6 assertion in Count XII of a claim under the Fourteenth Amendment betrays a fundamental 7 misunderstanding of constitutional structure, as that amendment imposes obligations upon state 8 governments and there is no allegation whatsoever that any state government has had any 9 interaction with Plaintiffs in Iraq.

12           1.     As Aliens With No Connection to the United States, Plaintiffs Have No
13                    Constitutional Rights to Invoke With Respect to Actions Taking Place
14                    in Iraq

15           The Bill of Rights is a compact between the United States government and its people, and 16 establishes certain rights to be enjoyed by the American people vis-à-vis the United States 17 government and, in certain cases, state and local governments. See Ross v. McIntyre, 140 U.S.
18 453, 464 (1891) (“By the constitution a government is ordained and established ‘for the United 19 States of America,’ and not for countries outside of their limits.”). Yet, Plaintiffs, who have 20 undertaken none of the obligations of United States citizenship or domicile, ask this Court to rule 21 that the entire world is bestowed with the rights set forth in the United States Constitution as 22 against private contractors working for the United States government. However, both the 23 Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit have held that the constitutional rights set forth in the Bill 24 of Rights do not extend to aliens lacking a significant connection to the United States.

27           While observing that a noncitizen located in the United States possesses certain 28 constitutional rights, the Supreme Court in Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763 (1950), made

1 clear that those rights are dependent on the alien's identification with the United States through 2 his presence in this country:

3           The alien, to whom the United States has been traditionally 4 hospitable, has been accorded a generous and ascending scale of 5 rights as he increases his identity with our society. Mere lawful 6 presence in the country creates an implied assurance of safe 7 conduct and gives him certain rights; they become more extensive 8 and secure when he makes preliminary declaration of intention to become a citizen, and they expand to those of full citizenship upon naturalization. . . .

9           But, in extending constitutional protections beyond the citizenry, 10 the Court has been at pains to point out that it was the alien's 11 presence within its territorial jurisdiction that gave the Judiciary power to act.

12 Id. at 770-71.

13           Consistent with Johnson, the Ninth Circuit has flatly observed in connection with the 14 Eighth Amendment that "the Constitution itself does not apply to aliens whose claims arise 15 outside the United States." In re Estate of Ferdinand Marcos, Human Rights Litig., 25 F.3d 16 1467, 1476 n.12 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Ross, 140 U.S. at 464 ("The constitution can have no 17 operation in another country.").<sup>17</sup> Similarly, the Supreme Court has held that aliens have no

21           <sup>17</sup> Indeed, this result is the natural outgrowth of the Supreme Court's rulings in the 22 Insular Cases and other cases that not every provision in the Constitution applies even in insular 23 possessions over which the United States exercises sovereign power. See Verdugo-Urquidez, 24 494 U.S. at 268; Balzac v. People of Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298, 304-05 (1922) (holding that 25 constitutional right to jury trial does not apply, even in favor of United States citizens, "to 26 territory belonging to the United States which has not been incorporated into the Union"); 27 Ocampo v. United States, 234 U.S. 91, 98 (1914) (holding Fifth Amendment grand jury right 28 inapplicable in Philippines); Dorr v. United States, 195 U.S. 138, 149 (1904) (holding that constitutional right to jury trial does not apply in the Philippines); Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U.S.
197, 218 (1903) (holding that rights to jury trial and grand jury indictment inapplicable in Hawaii). Given that United States citizens may not enjoy all of their constitutional rights when located in certain United States territories, it makes perfect sense that an alien would not enjoy such rights when on another country's soil.

1 United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez, 494 U.S. 259, 261 (1990), and has “rejected the claim that 2 aliens are entitled to Fifth Amendment rights outside the sovereign territory of the United 3 States.” Id. at 269 (citing Johnson, 339 U.S. at 763).

5 All of the actions that Plaintiffs assert violated “their” constitutional rights are alleged to 6 have occurred within the sovereign nation of Iraq during the United States’ temporary 7 occupation of that country. Because Iraq is not part of the United States’ sovereign territory, 8 much less part of the United States itself, aliens present in Iraq are not entitled to claim the 9 benefit of the constitutional rights that are bestowed upon Americans by virtue of the Bill of 10 Rights.<sup>18</sup> Therefore, all of Plaintiffs’ “constitutional” claims fail as a matter of law and must be 11 dismissed.
12

13 2. Plaintiffs’ Fourteenth Amendment Claim Fails for the Additional 14 Reason that the Fourteenth Amendment Creates Rights Only Vis-à- 15 Vis State Governments

16 In Count XII of the Complaint, Plaintiffs inexplicably allege that Defendants somehow 17 violated Plaintiffs’ Fourteenth Amendment rights. By its plain terms, the Fourteenth 18 Amendment imposes obligations only on state governments. See Dist. of Columbia v. Carter,

19 20 <sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court’s recent holding in Rasul v. Bush, 124 S. Ct. 2686 (2004), that 21 certain alien detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba can assert a statutory habeas corpus petition 22 does not affect the result here. First, that decision rests on a construction of the federal habeas 23 corpus statute, not upon constitutional grounds. Moreover, in finding a statutory habeas right for 24 the Guantanamo detainees, the Court noted that the detainees there were “held in Executive 25 detention for more than two years in territory subject to the long-term, exclusive jurisdiction and 26 control of the United States.” Id. at 2698 n.15 (emphasis added). The degree of United States 27 control over Guantanamo Bay, which the Rasul Court described as “complete” and “permanent,” 28 id. at 2691 & n.2, stands in stark contrast to the United States’ temporary assertion of military control over Iraq in the context of a short-term wartime occupation. Indeed, the United States’ occupation of Iraq is more temporary than its years-long occupation of post-World War II Germany, an exercise of control that the Supreme Court held did not confer constitutional rights upon aliens imprisoned there. See Johnson, 339 U.S. at 785. Simply put, constitutional rights must flow either from United States citizenship or the presence of an alien in United States territory, and Plaintiffs satisfy neither of these criteria.

1 409 U.S. 418, 420 (1973) (holding Fourteenth Amendment inapplicable to the D.C. government).
2 Plaintiffs do not allege that a state or local government has had any role in Iraq. Thus, Plaintiffs 3 could not maintain a Fourteenth Amendment claim against Defendants even if Plaintiffs actually 4 possessed Fourteenth Amendment rights with respect to conduct occurring in Iraq.

6 G. Plaintiffs' "Geneva Conventions" Claim (Count X) Fails as a Matter of Law

7 In Count X, Plaintiffs purport to state a cause of action under the Third and Fourth 8 Geneva Conventions. However, the Geneva Conventions are not self-executing, and redress for 9 supposed Geneva Convention violations are addressed between and among the signatory parties, 10 and not through private litigation. Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 316 F.3d 450, 468 (4th Cir. 2003), 11 vacated on other grounds, 124 S. Ct. 2633 (2004); Tel-Oren v. Libyan Arab Republic, 726 F.2d 12 774, 808 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (opinion of Bork, J.); Handel v. Artukovic, 601 F. Supp. 1421, 1425 13 (C.D. Cal. 1985). Federal courts repeatedly have held that the Geneva Conventions do not create 14 a private right of action and that claims asserted under the Geneva Conventions are subject to 15 dismissal on that basis. See Hamdi, 316 F.3d at 468; Tel-Oren, 726 F.2d at 808-09 (opinion of 16 Bork, J.); Huynh Thi Anh v. Levi, 586 F.2d 625, 629 (6th Cir. 1978); Holmes v. Laird, 459 F.2d 17 1211, 1222 (D.C. Cir. 1972); Iwanowa v. Ford Motor Co., 67 F. Supp. 2d 424, 439 n.16 (D.N.J.
18 1999); Handel, 601 F. Supp. at 1425. Because Plaintiffs are not entitled as private litigants to 19 assert claims under the Geneva Conventions, the Court must dismiss Count X of the Complaint.
22

23 H. By Its Plain Terms, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act
24 Does Not Apply to CACI or to Prisons in Iraq

25 In Count XIV, Plaintiffs allege that defendants violated § 2000cc-1 of Religious Land 26 Use and Institutionalized Persons Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc, et seq. ("RLUIPA"), which provides
28

1 No government shall impose a substantial burden on the religious 2 exercise of a person residing in or confined to an institution, as 3 defined in section 1997 of this title . . . .

4 Id. § 2000cc-1 (emphasis added). With respect to § 2000cc-1, “government” is defined as:

5 (i) a State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity
6 created under the authority of a State;

7 (ii) any branch, department, agency, instrumentality, or official of 8 an entity listed in clause (i); and 9 (iii) any other person acting under color of State law . . . .

10 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-5(4) (emphasis added). Thus, § 2000cc-1 regulates the conduct only of state 11 and local governments and persons acting under color of state law.

12 If that were not enough, § 2000cc-1 regulates only activities in “institutions” and 13 specifically points the reader to 42 U.S.C. § 1997 for the appropriate definition of that term.
14 Section 1997 defines an “institution” as “any facility or institution . . . which is owned, operated,
15 or managed by, or provides services on behalf of any State or political subdivision of a State. 42
16 U.S.C. § 1997(1) (emphasis added). In essence, plaintiffs have sued CACI under a statute 17 regulating the manner in which “governments” operate “institutions” when the definitions 18 contained in the statute itself exclude CACI from the definition of “governments” and exclude 19 Iraqi prisons from the definition of “institutions.” Therefore, Count XIV must be dismissed.
20

21 I. Plaintiffs’ Claim for Alleged Violations of United States Contracting Laws
22 (Count XXV) Fails to State a Claim

23 Perhaps the most extreme example of Plaintiffs’ hubris, in a Complaint filled with them, 24 is their assertion that they, as aliens, should be able to direct the contracting policies of the 25 United States government. In Count XXV, Plaintiffs claim an entitlement to litigate whether the 26 CACI Defendants violated the “laws governing contracting with the United States” and claim an 27

1 entitlement to ask this Court to prohibit the United States – a nonparty, by the way – from 2 awarding any contracts to the CACI Defendants. This claim fails for a myriad of reasons.

3         The most obvious defect in Count XXV is that the Complaint fails to identify the manner 4 in which the CACI Defendants supposedly violated the contracting laws of the United States.
5 While Plaintiffs make the bald assertion that “Defendants violated the United States Federal 6 Acquisition Regulations, the United States Truth in Negotiations Act, the United States Cost 7 Accounting Standards, and other laws and regulations that govern the placement and 8 implementation of contracts,” SAC ¶ 319, the Court will not find a single paragraph in the 9 Complaint that describes how the CACI Defendants supposedly violated these statutes and 10 regulations, or even a statement as to which provisions in these voluminous documents the CACI 11 Defendants supposedly violated. All the Court is left with is a conclusory statement that 12 Defendants in some undisclosed manner violated unidentified provisions in United States 13 statutes and/or regulations, including “other laws and regulations” that Plaintiffs apparently 14 would identify at some later date. SAC ¶ 319. Bare legal conclusions such as these do not come 15 close to satisfying the requirement that Plaintiffs state facts sufficient to support their claims.
16 Ove, 264 F.3d at 821 (“[C]onclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are 17 insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.”).

18         Moreover, even if Plaintiffs had bothered to allege specific violations of federal 19 contracting regulations, it is difficult to see how they would have standing to assert such a claim.
20 Article III of the United States Constitution requires that a plaintiff “have suffered an ‘injury in 21 fact’ – an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) 22 actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical,” for a federal court to assert jurisdiction over 23 the suit. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). “Abstract injury is not
25 26 27
28

1 enough” to sustain federal jurisdiction. Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the War, 2 418 U.S. 208, 219 (1974). Here, Plaintiffs have not only failed to identify the particular statutory 3 or regulatory provisions that Defendants supposedly violated, but they have failed to explain how 4 they suffered an injury as a result of such violations. Indeed, as aliens, Plaintiffs could not even 5 seek to assert taxpayer standing over these undisclosed alleged violations of law. Because 6 Plaintiffs have not identified a causal connection between supposed violation of contracting laws 7 and any injuries they allegedly suffered, and because, in any event, aliens should not be 8 permitted to direct the contracting policy of the United States, Plaintiffs lack standing to assert
10

12 Finally, Count XXV should be dismissed for failure to join an indispensable party. See 13 Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b). Plaintiffs seek an order that effectively prohibits the United States from 14 entering into contracts with the CACI Defendants as well as Titan. Since such an order to dictate 15 to the United States government whether it can enter into future contracts with Defendants, the 16 United States is an indispensable party to Plaintiffs’ claim if, of course, Plaintiffs had standing 17 and bothered to identify the provisions of federal contracting law that Defendants supposedly 18 violated. See Dawavendewa v. Salt River Project Agr. Imp. & Power Dist., 276 F.3d 1150, 1157 19 (9th Cir. 2002) (reaffirming “the fundamental principle [that] a party to a contract is necessary, 20 and if not susceptible to joinder, indispensable to litigation seeking to decimate that contract.”); 21 Clinton v. Babbitt, 180 F.3d 1081, 1088 (9th Cir. 1999) (“[A] district court cannot adjudicate an 22 attack on the terms of a negotiated agreement without jurisdiction over the parties to that 23 agreement.”); Lomayaktewa v. Hathaway, 520 F.2d 1324, 1325 (9th Cir. 1975) (“No procedural 24 principle is more deeply imbedded in the common law than that, in an action to set aside a lease 25
27
28

1 or a contract, all parties who may be affected by the determination of the action are 2 indispensable.”).

3 III. CONCLUSION

4 Plaintiffs’ claims ask this Court to resolve issues that are properly reserved to the political 5 branches of the United States government, essentially asking this Court to serve as a one-person 6 reparations committee. Because Plaintiffs’ claims are legally insufficient, the Court should 7 dismiss the Complaint in its entirety. Moreover, because amendment cannot cure the flaws in 8 the Complaint, the Court’s dismissal should be with prejudice and without leave to replead.
