(U) Source Summary Statement

Press reporting attributed to Israeli defense officials indicates most of the flotilla's fatalities were Turkish (with one dual citizen AMCIT), as are several of the seized vessels--including the one on which the clash took place.

- Following the incident, Ankara withdrew its ambassador to Israel.
Of particular concern is the claim repeated in press outlets of linkages between Israel and the Kongra Gel (KGK, formerly PKK). Press has speculated over the timing of the flotilla incident and a KGK attack on a military outpost that occurred soon after. AKP Deputy Chairman Celik commented shortly after the incidents that "We don't think the [incidents are] coincidental." Erdogan and AKP politicians will exploit such speculation for domestic political benefit.
this follows Ankara’s late May request to Israel that it not participate in the international portion of this year’s ANATOLIAN EAGLE combined air exercises."[18]

(U) Israel/Turkey/AOI: Regional Reactions to Gaza Flotilla Incident

- Following the incident, Turkish protesters attempted to storm the Israeli Embassy in Ankara and its consulate in Istanbul. Turkish authorities are securing the diplomatic facilities, but the Turkish government termed Israel's actions illegal and unacceptable, recalled its ambassador from Israel, and announced the cancellation of three planned combined military exercises.

- The AKP will be tempted to capitalize on this upsurge in anti-Israeli sentiment to take unprecedented steps to distance itself and Turkey from Israel, a move consistent with Erdogan's frequent anti-Israel rhetoric. With riots in the streets, the Foreign Ministry promising "irreversible consequences," and a so-far unsatisfactory international response, the flotilla incident has provided the AKP with sufficient cause--and sufficient popular support--to suspend or even sever diplomatic relations with Israel.
Israel's enemies—Iran, Syria, Hizballah and especially HAMAS—are all exploiting the incident for public relations gain. Tehran, Damascus and Beirut have publicly condemned Israel's "inhuman" action, and Syria initiated the call for an emergency Arab League meeting to address the issue. HAMAS' de facto government in Gaza has similarly decried the Israeli action and will attempt to focus international attention on the Israeli blockade of Gaza. [N]

(U) Israel: Status of Bilateral Relations with US

(U) Perceived Value of the Relationship

(Comment: Israel's political figures, including President Peres and members of PM Netanyahu's cabinet, have referred to US-Israel bilateral relations as Israel's single most important strategic asset.)

CCR Gallagher/10-L-1242/000156
(b)(1), Sec. 1.4(c)

(U) Israeli Perception of Cairo Speech

(b)(1), Sec. 1.4(c)

- (4) Following the speech, Netanyahu launched an immediate but generally ineffective PR blitz, arguing the US was still on Israel's side, but failed to convince even his own cabinet.[(3)(4)] Minister Without Portfolio Peled, a member of Netanyahu's Likud Party, took the harshest line, publishing an open letter recommending the government stop buying US weapons, start proliferating high-tech weapons against US wishes, break the US monopoly on the peace process, and manipulate US elections against the sitting government.[(5)]

- (4) While most reactions were more measured, Peled's extreme rhetoric was nonetheless reflective of a widespread perception. Prior to the Cairo speech, a plurality of Jewish Israelis (42%) believed the US was biased toward Israel, with just 16% believing it favored the Palestinians. Following the speech, those poll numbers nearly reversed (19% and 41% respectively) and a large plurality (47%) continue to view the US as biased in favor of the Palestinians today.[(6)]

(b)(1), Sec. 1.4(c)

- (4) To date, Netanyahu has remained largely unscathed from the public's concern over the bilateral relationship. Polls continue to show that Israelis are relatively dissatisfied with the state of US-Israel relations, but most of the blame has been directed at the US while a strong majority (71% as of May) approve of Netanyahu's handling of the relationship.

- Netanyahu did face widespread criticism for perceived mismanagement of relations with the US following an unsatisfactory visit to DC in March—the Israeli public assigns a lot of value to face-to-face interactions—so he is likely especially sensitive to the relationship's political import.

- Netanyahu's most recent visit to Washington in July was effectively stage-managed to provide a positive public interaction, at least momentarily reassuring a skeptical Israeli public. However, Tel Aviv is aware that such measures are temporary fixes at best.

In the year since the Cairo speech, Israel has devoted a great deal of effort to analyzing the current US administration's policy goals, and Tel Aviv has apparently concluded that the US's particular interest in Middle Eastern stability is genuine. Israeli Ambassador to the US Michael Oren, recently summoned back to Israel to address the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, controversially described a "tectonic shift" in US foreign policy during a visit almost certainly designed to help Israel recalibrate its engagement with the US.
• The most pointed word of caution came immediately following the flotilla incident, when Mossad chief Meir Dagan told an open session of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee that Israel was gradually becoming a "burden" on the US instead of an asset, a statement almost certainly intended as a prescriptive warning to policymakers.\[23\]

• In mid-July, Defense Minister Ehud Barak called for a "daring and assertive political initiative" to rebuild ties with the US and thwart international isolation, citing US political assistance following the flotilla incident as evidence of the continued relevance of US-Israeli ties. Barak also explicitly argued that political gestures in support of US peace process goals were required to win freedom of maneuver for future (presumably unilateral) military actions.\[24\]

In mid-2009, the Israel Defense Forces J5 explicitly acknowledged that Tel Aviv adjusts its strategic decision-making based on its interpretation of US policy. Looking forward, we expect Israel will continue to highly value its relationship with the US, and will therefore specifically consider the effect on US-Israel relations when evaluating any potentially controversial decisions.\[23\]

Libyan sponsors to ensure a non-confrontational resolution in return for Israel’s approval of a major Gaza reconstruction project.\textsuperscript{[27]} Israeli probably would not have been willing to negotiate, much less offer concessions, if it were not concerned with preserving its dwindling political capital.

While not entirely illogical, the dual-track plan does have one glaring flaw: Netanyahu has almost no ability to produce even the appearance of progress in Palestinian final status negotiations without condemning his government. With the West Bank’s temporary construction freeze set to expire in September, a showdown is looming and Netanyahu appears to be facing a no-win scenario.

- If he extends the freeze in an attempt to appease the US and take pressure off Barak, Netanyahu is likely to alienate his own and other right-wing parties, a scenario that has an even chance of collapsing his governing coalition. If new elections are called, Netanyahu’s personal political career would be set back and Israel would have to reset its relations with the US under a new government—after having lost upwards of three to six months of time to work against Iran. Even if Netanyahu managed to salvage a new coalition framework, his credibility would be damaged, time would be lost to contentious government formation, and all foreseeable government would still be unlikely to achieve US peace process goals.

- If he ends the freeze in order to satisfy popular sentiment and his right-wing base, Netanyahu is likely to lose Barak’s Labor Party from his coalition, but could remain in power with a slim majority. However, this move would undermine the US-backed final status process and would rule out follow-on direct talks. Netanyahu would expect this course of action to damage US-Israel cooperation vis-a-vis Iran, and this ostensibly populist move could even produce a net-negative effect on his popularity in Israel if the perceived US backlash is bad enough.

Ultimately, while nearly all Israelis agree that US support is vital and endorse the Netanyahu government’s efforts to ensure that support in principle, few if any Israelis are willing to compromise their personal interests in the process. With no apparent means of satisfying these mutually exclusive demands, Netanyahu is almost certainly incapable of re-strengthening the bilateral relationship enough to support Israel’s policy aspirations.

- In that vacuum, he is most likely to make the decision that benefits him personally—not least because it is more reliably predictable—and lift the settlement freeze while attempting to salvage US-Israeli relations through promises of future cooperation.

- As an alternative, some Israeli commentators have separately indicated a belief that US Middle East policy is being heavily influenced by upcoming US mid-term elections. If this theory takes hold, it is possible that Netanyahu’s government will simply attempt to wait the US out until November in hopes that US executive policy shifts in Israel’s favor and/or a new US Congress provides a more sympathetic counterweight.\textsuperscript{[38]}

(U) Turkey/Israel: Israeli Tourism Expected to Decline Following Gaza Aid Flotilla Incident

According to 1 June Turkish press, Turkey's tourism sector is expected to decline following the 31 May Gaza aid flotilla incident. Israeli citizens account for approximately 2% of foreign visitors, and though Turkish officials stated Israeli tourists are safe, cruises from Israel to Turkey have already been cancelled or diverted as a result of the incident and Israel issued a "grave" travel advisory for Turkey on 31 May. Decreased tourism between the two countries was noted as early as January 2009 due to political tensions surrounding Israeli operations against Gaza. Turkey's tourism revenues for 2009 were lower than that of 2008; however,

(U) Turkey's growing diplomatic engagement with the Middle East can be characterized as a determination to end its Cold War passivity and help stabilize the region by diversifying its foreign policy, minimizing tensions with its difficult neighbors, and promoting Turkey's international status. Turkey primarily relies on its diversified economic strength and diplomatic ambition to compete with other regional powers. Forging ties with Russia, China, Iran, Arab countries, and others farther afield such as Brazil provide Ankara with support when taking policies independent from the US.
