INTRODUCTION

2 On November 9, 2018, the government published an emergency regulation, followed
3 immediately by a Proclamation invoking Section 212(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act
4 (8 U.S.C. § 1182(f)), which together categorically bar asylum for individuals who enter the United 5 States along the southern border between ports of entry, regardless of how much danger those 6 individuals face if returned to their home countries. The interim rule was issued without the “notice 7 and comment” procedures or the 30-day waiting period that are required by the Administrative 8 Procedure Act (“APA”) to ensure that agency action is transparent, fair, and accountable. Because 9 “good cause” did not exist to disregard these bedrock procedural requirements, the regulation 10 violates the APA. For this reason alone, a Temporary Restraining Order (“TRO”) is necessary to 11 preserve the status quo.
12

13 More fundamentally, a per se ban on asylum at the southern border based solely on the fact
14 that an individual did not enter and assert his or her fear of persecution at a port of entry is patently
15 unlawful under the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”). Consistent with its international 16 obligations, Congress has specifically and unambiguously addressed this issue and made clear in the 17 INA that asylum is available regardless of “whether or not” an individual entered “at a designated 18 port of arrival.” 8 U.S.C. § 1158. Neither the Attorney General (through a regulation), nor the 19 President (through a § 212(f) Proclamation), has the power to override that explicit and longstanding 20 congressional directive.

22 Indeed, the Acting Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security no doubt recognize 23 that they cannot issue a regulation that is in square conflict with the express terms of the statute 24 under which they are acting. That is presumably why the President issued a Proclamation in 25 conjunction with the regulation. But the President’s 212(f) proclamation power likewise cannot 26 override a congressionally mandated statutory directive. Notably, in defending the President’s §
27 212(f) travel ban, the government went out of its way to explain that the travel ban did not conflict
28

1 with a specific statutory command. The Supreme Court agreed with the government that the travel
2 ban did not conflict with a specific statutory provision and, significantly, stated: “We may assume 3 that § 1182(f) does not allow the President to expressly override particular provisions of the INA.”
4 Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. 2392, 2411 (2018). Yet that is precisely what the President seeks to do 5 here.

6 The stakes in this case are high. The availability of asylum is often all that stands between an 7 individual and severe persecution or death. The Administration’s refrain that some individuals do 8 not ultimately file for asylum, or will not ultimately prevail on their claims, misses the point.
9 Congress has made clear that there must be a process to determine who is a legitimate asylum seeker
10 and that eligibility to seek asylum cannot turn on “whether or not” one enters at a port of entry, 8
11 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) – a fact that has no bearing on the degree of danger one would face if sent back 12 to his or her home country.

14 Moreover, the stakes in this case are enormous not only because it involves the fundamental 15 humanitarian protections of asylum, but also because it implicates foundational separation of powers
16 concerns. This is not a case where the President is filling a void left open by Congress or operating 17 within the interstices of broad congressional policy. It is just the opposite. Here, the President and 18 Attorney General are trying to override Congress and settled law. If the courts allow the President to 19 take this step here, he could not only override statutory asylum law, but disregard the entirety of our 20 congressional immigration scheme – a scheme that reflects Congress’s considered judgment about 21 how to balance the nation’s ideals and competing policy priorities.

24 For the past four decades, asylum has been available regardless of where one entered the 25 country. A TRO is warranted to preserve that status quo. In the absence of immediate judicial 26 intervention, families in serious danger, including children, could be imminently removed and 27 effectively delivered back to their persecutors without ever having had the chance even to apply for 28 asylum. Plaintiffs also will be deprived of their critical procedural right to submit comments

1 regarding the illegality of the rule and the flawed factual premises underlying the government's 2 proffered reasons for promulgating it.

3 BACKGROUND

4 A. Statutory Background

5 Federal law provides for asylum, which is a form of protection available to individuals who 6 fear persecution in their home countries. The asylum laws reflect Congress's intent to bring the 7 United States into compliance with its international obligations under the 1967 United Nations
8 Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees. Orantes-Hernandez v. Thornburgh, 919 F.2d 549, 551
9 (9th Cir. 1990). Asylum law affords protection to individuals who have a "well-founded fear of 10 persecution" on account of any one of five protected grounds: race, religion, nationality, political 11 opinion, or membership in a particular social group. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(1)(A); 8 U.S.C.
12 § 1101(a)(42)(A). A ten percent chance of harm is sufficient to establish a well-founded fear.
13 Orantes-Hernandez, 919 F.2d at 553 n.9.

14 There are three principal ways for an individual to seek asylum. First, where a noncitizen is 15 not in any kind of removal proceedings, his or her application is considered to be an "affirmative"
16 filing. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 208.2(a), 208.9. Second, a noncitizen in ordinary removal proceedings, see 8
17 U.S.C. § 1229a, may submit a "defensive" application for asylum as a form of relief from removal, 8
18 C.F.R. § 208.2(b). Third, as part of the expedited removal system—an alternative summary removal
19 system currently applicable to certain individuals at or within 100 miles of the border—a noncitizen
20 who expresses a fear of return to his or her home country is entitled to a "credible fear" screening 21 interview. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B). If the screening officer finds a "significant possibility" that the 22 individual "could establish eligibility for asylum," he or she is placed in ordinary removal 23 proceedings and given an opportunity to apply for asylum. Id.

24 Critically, and consistent with our international law obligations, Congress made clear that 25 manner of entry is irrelevant to asylum availability. Section 1158(a)(1) provides that "[a]ny alien 26 who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at 27
28

1 a designated port of arrival and including an alien who is brought to the United States after having 2 been interdicted in international or United States waters), irrespective of such alien’s status, may 3 apply for asylum in accordance with this section or, where applicable, section 1225(b) of this title.”
 4 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) (emphasis added).

5 B. The Interim Final Rule and § 212(f) Proclamation

6 Through a combination of an Interim Final Rule and a § 212(f) Proclamation, the 7 government has sought to squarely overturn Congress’s clear directive that asylum cannot be 8 categorically denied based on unlawful entry.

10 On November 8, 2018, the Acting Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security 11 issued an Interim Final Rule. See “Aliens Subject to a Bar on Entry under Certain Presidential 12 Proclamations; Procedures for Protection Claims,” available at 13 https://www.regulations.gov/document?D=EOIR_FRDOC_0001-0039. Invoking the power to 14 “establish additional limitations and conditions, consistent with [§ 1158], under which an alien shall 15 be ineligible for asylum,” 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(2)(C), Defendants established a new bar to asylum.
 16 Under the rule, any individual whose entry is prohibited by a proclamation or order of the President 17 concerning the southern border, issued pursuant to INA § 212(f) or INA § 215(a)(1), 8 U.S.C.
 18 § 1185(a), is now barred from asylum.¹

20 The next day, the President signed a Proclamation, invoking INA § 212(f) and INA § 215(a).
 21 See “Presidential Proclamation Addressing Mass Migration Through the Southern Border of the 22 United States,” available at https://www.whitehouse.gov/presidential-
 23

24 ¹ The interim rule permits those who enter between ports to apply for a form of relief called “Withholding of Removal.”
 25 See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3). But to qualify for withholding of removal, the applicant must satisfy a standard of proof far
 26 higher than for asylum. Rather than the well-founded fear governing asylum, an applicant for withholding must show
 27 that it is “more likely than not” that he or she will suffer persecution. It is therefore not a substitute for the asylum relief 28 authorized by statute. Orantes-Hernandez, 919 F.2d at 553 n.9 The interim rule also permits individuals barred from asylum to apply for relief under the Convention Against Torture (“CAT”). Convention Against Torture, see Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (“FARRA”), Pub. L. No. 105-277, div. G, Title XXII, § 2242, 112 Stat.
 2681, 2681-822 (1998) (codified as Note to 8 U.S.C. § 1231); 8 C.F.R. § 208.18. But, unlike asylum, a CAT applicant must show he or she will likely be tortured by (or with the acquiescence of) the home government.

1 proclamation-addressing-mass-migration-southern-border-united-states/. The Proclamation
 2 suspends the entry of noncitizens entering at the southern border between ports of entry. Together,
 3 the Interim Final Rule and Proclamation categorically bar asylum for every individual who enters 4 without inspection at the southern border.

5 LEGAL STANDARD

6 On a motion for a TRO, the plaintiff “must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits,
 7 that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of 8 equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.” Saravia for A.H. v.
 9 Sessions, 905 F.3d 1137, 1142 (9th Cir. 2018); see Stuhlberg Int’l Sales Co. v. John D. Brush & Co.,
 10 240 F.3d 832, 839 n.7 (9th Cir. 2001) (standard for a TRO or Preliminary Injunction is “substantially 11 identical”). A TRO may issue where “serious questions going to the merits [are] raised and the 12 balance of hardships tips sharply in [plaintiff’s] favor.” All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632
 13 F.3d 1127, 1131 (9th Cir. 2011).

15 ARGUMENT

16 PLAINTIFFS ARE LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON THE MERITS

17 Plaintiffs move for a TRO on two grounds, either one of which is sufficient to warrant 18 preserving the status quo. First, the government lacked any sufficient justification to disregard the 19 procedural requirements of the APA. See Section I. Second, the government’s categorical denial of 20 asylum to those who enter between ports on the U.S.-Mexico border violates the INA, and thus is 21 contrary to law and ultra vires under the APA’s substantive standards. See Section II.

24 I. The Interim Final Rule Violates The Procedural Requirements of The APA.

25 The new regulation violates the APA’s procedural requirements in two respects. First, the 26 Department of Justice issued the rule without providing notice and opportunity for comment, a 27 bedrock requirement that ensures the public’s involvement in the formulation of governmental 28 policy. 5 U.S.C. §§ 553(b), (c). Second, and alternatively, the rule takes immediate effect,

1 without the 30-day notice period required by law, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 553(d). Contrary to 2 the government’s assertion, there is no good cause for the regulation to go into immediate effect,
3 nor does this case fall within the narrow foreign affairs exception.

4 A. The Attorney General Failed to Engage in Notice and Comment Rulemaking.

5 The APA requires federal agencies to publish in the Federal Register a general notice of 6 proposed rulemaking prior to the promulgation of any regulation, to allow “interested persons an 7 opportunity to participate in the rulemaking through submission of written data, views, or arguments 8 with or without opportunity for oral presentation.” Id. § 553(c). Comments must be considered and 9 addressed in the notice of final rulemaking: “[a]fter consideration of the relevant matter presented,
10 the agency shall incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and 11 purpose.” Id.

13 The notice requirements of § 553 “are designed (1) to ensure that agency regulations are 14 tested via exposure to diverse public comment, (2) to ensure fairness to affected parties, and (3) to 15 give affected parties an opportunity to develop evidence in the record to support their objections to 16 the rule and thereby enhance the quality of judicial review.” Int’l Union, United Mine Workers of 17 Am. v. Mine Safety & Health Admin., 407 F.3d 1250, 1259 (D.C. Cir. 2005). “It is antithetical to the 18 structure and purpose of the APA for an agency to implement a rule first, and then seek comment 19 later.” United States v. Valverde, 628 F.3d 1159, 1164 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Paulsen v.
20 Daniels, 413 F.3d 999, 1005 (9th Cir. 2005)).

22 There is no dispute that the Acting Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security
23 failed to comply with these requirements. Instead, in the Federal Register Notice, Defendants offer a 24 cursory assertion of “good cause” to bypass notice and comment pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(B).
25 There is no good cause to skip the normal notice and comment requirement. The government also 26 improperly seeks to fit this rule into what is only a narrow exception for foreign affairs.
27

28 Section 553(b)(B) of Title 5 provides an exception to the notice and comment requirements

1 “when the agency for good cause finds . . . that notice and public procedure thereon are 2 impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.” “[T]he agency’s decision not to 3 follow the APA’s notice and comment procedure” is reviewed de novo. Reno-Sparks Indian Colony
4 v. EPA, 336 F.3d 899, 910 n.11 (9th Cir. 2003).

5 A reviewing court is to “examine closely” the agency’s explanation as outlined in the rule.
6 Council of S. Mountains, Inc. v. Donovan, 653 F.2d 573, 580 (D.C. Cir. 1981). Because notice and 7 comment is the default procedure, “the onus is on the [agency] to establish that notice and comment”
8 should not be given. Action on Smoking & Health v. Civil Aeronautics Bd., 713 F.2d 795, 801 n.6
9 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Successfully invoking the good cause exception requires the agency to “overcome
10 a high bar,” as “the good cause exception should be ‘narrowly construed and only reluctantly 11 countenanced.’” Valverde, 628 F.3d at 1164 (quoting Jifry v. FAA, 370 F.3d 1174, 1179 (D.C. Cir.
12 2004)). “[T]he good cause exception is essentially an emergency procedure,” id. at 1165 (quoting 13 Buschmann v. Schweiker, 676 F.2d 352, 357 (9th Cir. 1982)), and so “should be limited to 14 emergency situations,” Am. Fed. of Gov’t Emps. v. Block, 655 F.2d 1153, 1156 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

17 Defendants have asserted that they have good cause because providing notice and comment
18 would be “impracticable” and “contrary to the public interest.” See Interim Final Rule at 65 (citing 5 19 U.S.C. § 553(b)(B)). Specifically, they assert that permitting notice and comment to proceed in the 20 normal course would create “an incentive for aliens to seek to cross the border” during those periods.
21 Interim Final Rule at 65-67. That argument is unfounded and insufficient to establish good cause.

23 The impracticability prong of the good cause exception is only satisfied “where delay would 24 imminently threaten life or physical property.” Sorenson Commc’ns Inc. v. FCC, 755 F.3d 702, 706 25 (D.C. Cir. 2014); see also Jifry, 370 F.3d at 1179 (upholding good cause assertion where rule was 26 “necessary to prevent a possible imminent hazard to aircraft, persons, and property within the United 27 States” based on “the threat of further terrorist acts involving aircraft in the aftermath of September 28 11, 2001”); Council of the S. Mountains, Inc., 653 F.2d at 581 (good cause shown where rule was

1 one of “life-saving importance” involving miners in a mine explosion); Sorenson, 755 F.3d at 706-
2 07 (rejecting an agency’s assertion of a fiscal emergency because it would be short up to $159
3 million as sufficient to bypass notice and comment). That is certainly not the case here. There is 4 nothing in the Interim Rule that suggests that the publication of a proposed rule with notice and an 5 opportunity to comment would imminently threaten life or physical property.

6 And the public interest prong “is met only in the rare circumstance when ordinary procedures
7 – generally presumed to serve the public interest – would in fact harm that interest.” Mack Trucks, 8 Inc. v. EPA, 682 F.3d 87, 95 (D.C. Cir. 2012). That is likewise not the case here.

10 Defendants fail to proffer any credible imminent threat or conceivable exigent circumstances.
11 Instead of demonstrating an actual threat of immediate harm to life, physical property, or the public
12 interest, Defendants have pointed only to “conclusory speculative” concerns, Valverde, 628 F.3d at 13 1164, which, on their own terms, suggest only a broad, long-term policy goal of deterring migration,
14 rather than an emergency need. Defendants surmise that preserving the status quo asylum system –
15 which has been in effect for decades – while allowing the ordinary publication process to unfold
16 might create an incentive for individuals to enter without inspection while the rulemaking procedures
17 are ongoing. But it is highly doubtful that this technical legal change will influence any asylum 18 seeker’s decisions about when and how to seek protection in this country. Indeed, in reality, many 19 asylum seekers do not even know what or where ports of entry are – much less the niceties of the 20 APA’s procedural requirements. See Declaration of Erika Pinheiro, Director of Litigation and 21 Policy, Al Otro Lado (Nov. 9, 2018), at ¶ 26; Declaration of Stephen W. Manning, Executive 22 Director, Innovation Law Lab (Nov. 9, 2018), at ¶ 14. And even if an asylum seeker were to become 23 aware of the notice and comment period, any possible incentive to arrive and enter more quickly
24 than he or she otherwise would have is outweighed by the preexisting incentives in the INA that 25 discourage entering between ports of entry, including criminal penalties associated with entering 26 without inspection and the administration’s “zero tolerance” policy mandating criminal prosecution
27
28

1 of illegal entrants. See 8 U.S.C. § 1325. Furthermore, even if an asylum seeker wanted to hasten his 2 or her entry into the United States because of a pending change to the asylum regime and was set on 3 entering between ports of entry, Defendants offer no reason to think an asylum seeker reasonably
4 could do so, particularly given the length of the journey – Central America and the U.S.-Mexico
5 border are thousands of miles apart – and the resource constraints facing many asylum seekers. The 6 unsubstantiated specter of a migration “surge” during the pre-promulgation notice and comment
7 period, or the period before the effective date, thus is highly suspect and insufficient to justify 8 abandonment of the typical rulemaking procedures.

10 The Ninth Circuit rejected a similarly flimsy rationale in Valverde. There, the Attorney
11 General implemented a rule penalizing the violation of certain sex offender registration
12 requirements. The Court explained that in light of the existing legal structure, the Attorney 13 General’s invocation of public safety could not establish good cause: “[T]he existence of stringent . .
14 . criminal sanctions on the books at the time the [interim] regulation was promulgated obviated the 15 case for an emergency.” 628 F.3d at 1168 (second alteration in original, internal quotation marks 16 omitted). As here, “[t]he Attorney General provided no reason why, in view of the existing statutory 17 regime . . . , it was necessary for the interim rule to be made effective immediately, without 18 providing any opportunity for notice and comment.” Id. (calling it “difficult to see what substantial 19 public safety interest was served”).
20

21 Nor does the volume of asylum seekers establish good cause. According to U.S. Customs
22 and Border Protection’s (“CBP”) own statistics, migration at the southern border is far lower today
23 than in recent decades.² The number of migrants apprehended by Border Patrol officials at the U.S.-
24 Mexico border each month in fiscal year 2018 is a fraction of the number apprehended each month

 2 Office on Latin America (Nov. 9, 2018), at ¶¶ 3-4. Even as migration numbers have dropped, CBP's
 3 resources have increased, and CBP now has twice the budget and number of officials it did in 2000.
 4 See id. ¶¶ 6-7. In 2017, the average Border Patrol agent apprehended only eighteen migrants along 5 the southern border all year long, or one every twenty days. Id. ¶ 3.

6 Within the context of this low migration volume, the United States saw an increase in Central 7 American families and unaccompanied minors coming to the southern border in 2014 and 2016.³
 8 The current influx of Central Americans seeking refuge thus is not new. Individuals apprehended at 9 the southern border during those previous influxes were provided an opportunity to apply for 10 asylum,⁴ and Defendants point to no consequences that threatened public safety or the public 11 interest, nor have they identified any reason to expect that a different result will obtain today.
 12 Because DHS and USCIS have been able to handle similar, if not larger, numbers in past years 13 without a change in longstanding asylum law, there is no reason to believe that such a change now is 14 so urgent that the agencies can justifiably bypass the requisite notice-and-comment procedures.⁵
 15

17 Defendants' contention that these procedural requirements do not apply because "this rule 18 involves a 'foreign affairs function of the United States,'" Interim Final Rule at 6 (quoting 5 U.S.C.
 19 553(a)(1)), is similarly flawed. They can offer only vague and insubstantial connections to foreign laws, consistent with our enforcement priorities. This has included, and will continue to include, providing individuals with an opportunity to assert claims for asylum and other forms of humanitarian relief.").

24 ⁵ The agencies' invocation of the migrant caravan currently traveling to the United States also does not constitute good 25 cause. As a factual matter, DHS' claims as to the number of migrants likely to reach the U.S. border are erroneous.
 According to military planning documents, only "about 20 percent of the roughly 7,000 migrants traveling through 26 Mexico are likely to complete the journey." Nick Miroff & Missy Ryan, "Army assessment of migrant caravans undermines Trump's rhetoric," Washington Post (Nov. 2, 2018), <https://wapo.st/2JC2m4p> (discussing U.S Army North, 27 JFLCC Threat Working Group PowerPoint Presentation 10, <https://bit.ly/2AKgXId> ("Historical Analysis – Assessed Trend: ~20% of individuals will make entire journey")). Furthermore, the caravan likely will not reach the United States 28 for several more weeks. See Isacson Decl. ¶ 9. And there is no reason to assume, as the Government does, that members of the caravan will seek to enter between ports of entry. The practices of past caravans indicate that many who make it to the U.S.-Mexico border will seek asylum at a port of entry. Id. ¶ 10.

1 policy, but that is insufficient to satisfy their high burden.

2 Like the other exceptions to notice and comment rulemaking, “Congress intended [this] 3 exception to have a narrow scope.” Indep. Guard Ass’n of Nevada, Local No. 1 v. O’Leary on 4 Behalf of U.S. Dep’t of Energy, 57 F.3d 766, 769 (9th Cir. 1995), opinion amended on denial of 5 reh’g, 69 F.3d 1038 (9th Cir. 1995) (addressing the “military function” prong of the same provision

7 exceptions apply only to the extent that the excepted subjects are directly involved.’” Id. (quoting
8 S.Doc. No. 248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 199 (1946)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

10 Accordingly, “for the exception to apply, the public rulemaking provisions should provoke
11 definitely undesirable international consequences.” Doe v. Trump, 288 F. Supp. 3d 1045, 1075
12 (W.D. Wash. 2017) (quoting Yassini v. Crosland, 618 F.2d 1356, 1360 n.4 (9th Cir. 1980) (alteration 13 omitted). There are no relevant undesirable circumstances here. The government states that it is in 14 related negotiations with Mexico and Central American countries. Interim Final Rule at 69. But that 15 does not mean notice and comment procedures will cause problems for foreign policy. On the 16 contrary, no “undesirable international consequences . . . would result if rulemaking were 17 employed.” Jean v. Nelson, 711 F.2d 1455, 1477–78 (11th Cir. 1983), dismissed in relevant part as 18 moot, 727 F.2d 957 (11th Cir. 1984) (en banc), aff’d, 472 U.S. 846 (1985). In the absence of such 19 “definitely undesirable international consequences,” the exception is inapplicable. Doe, 288 F.
20 Supp. 3d at 1075.
21

22 In sum, because it was promulgated in violation of the notice and comment requirements of 5
23 U.S.C. § 553(b) and (c), the rule should be stayed pending a final ruling on the merits.
24

25 B. The Attorney General Also Violated The APA’s Required 30-day Grace Period.

26 Even if notice and comment were not required, the rule would still violate 5 U.S.C. § 27 553(d)’s separate requirement that a rule be published “no less than 30 days before its effective date, 28 except . . . (3) as otherwise provided by the agency for good cause found and published with the

1 rule.” This requirement “protects those who are affected by agency action taken during the 30–day
 2 waiting period without disturbing later action that is not the product of the violation.” Prows v.
 3 Dep’t of Justice, 938 F.2d 274, 276 (D.C. Cir. 1991). For the same reasons stated above, the agency
 4 cannot show good cause why the 30-day waiting period should not apply to the rule, or that the 5 foreign affairs exception applies. If the Court reaches this alternate ground for relief, the proper
 6 remedy is to stay the rule for the necessary 30 days. Ngou v. Schweiker, 535 F. Supp. 1214, 1216
 7 (D.D.C. 1982).

 9 II. The Per Se Denial Of Asylum To All Noncitizens Who Enter Without Inspection
 10 Violates the INA and Is Contrary To Law.

11 A. The Regulation Violates The INA.

12 1. The regulation categorically denying asylum to all noncitizens who entered without 13 inspection at the southern border is flatly contrary to the INA, because Congress explicitly requires 14 that asylum be available to individuals who enter without inspection. The INA speaks with 15 unmistakable clarity to the precise question at issue in this case: whether individuals who enter 16 without inspection are nonetheless eligible for asylum. Section 1158(a)(1) provides that 17 “[a]ny alien who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the 18 United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival and including an alien 19 who is brought to the United States after having been interdicted in international or 20 United States waters), irrespective of such alien’s status, may apply for asylum in accordance with this section or, where applicable, section 1225(b) of this title.”

21 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) (emphasis added). This language is specific and precise. An individual who 22 has already entered without inspection is “physically present in the United States.” Id. Likewise, an 23 individual who is apprehended at the border but not at a port of entry—i.e. who is in the process of 24 entering without inspection—is “arriv[ing] in the United States . . . not at a designated port of 25 arrival.” Id. Thus, barring a person from asylum solely because he or she entered without inspection
 26 is at odds with the statutory mandate and must be invalidated as contrary to law. See United States
 27 v. Larionoff, 431 U.S. 864, 873 (1977) (stating that “in order to be valid,” regulations “must be 28

1 consistent with the statute under which they are promulgated”).⁶

2 Congress’s decision not to ban asylum based on one’s manner of entry makes sense: the 3 manner of entry bears no relation to how much danger one faces. Congress’s decision is also 4 consistent with the international law obligations of the United States regarding refugees. See 5 Declaration of Professor Guy Goodwin-Gill (Nov. 9, 2018) (noting, as one of the world’s leading 6 refugee and asylum authorities, that the U.S. government’s recent decision to enact a per se ban on 7 asylum for individuals who enter between ports at the U.S.-Mexico border violates international law,
8 including the 1951 United Nations Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees).⁷

10 The government attempts to wave away the significance of § 1158(a)(1) by asserting that the 11 new regulation only governs eligibility for asylum, whereas § 1158(a)(1) is concerned with the 12 ability to apply for asylum. See Interim Final Rule at 30. But accepting that argument would gut 13 Congress’s command in § 1158(a)(1) of any force. The ability to apply for asylum has to be a 14 meaningful one, involving some chance of actually receiving asylum. A categorical bar on the 15

16 ⁶ Not surprisingly in light of the language of the statute, the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) has also made clear 17 that the Attorney General cannot categorically deny asylum simply because an applicant entered between ports. Rather,
18 the BIA has noted that individuals who enter between ports are eligible to apply for asylum and that the manner of entry
19 becomes relevant, if at all, only at the end of the process when deciding whether the applicant should be denied asylum 20 as a matter of discretion. Notably, though, the BIA has made clear that even at the discretionary end of the process, the 21 manner of entry may not become a back-door means of routinely denying asylum, thereby undercutting Congress’s 22 decision to ensure that the applicant’s manner of entry did not render him per se ineligible for asylum. In Matter of 23 Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467 (BIA 1987), for instance, the BIA held that while “an alien’s manner of entry or attempted entry 24 is a proper and relevant discretionary factor to consider in adjudication asylum applications, . . . it should not be
25 considered in such a way that the practical effect is to deny relief in virtually all cases.” Id. at 474 (emphasis added).
26 And, the BIA added, a well-founded fear of persecution “should generally outweigh all but the most egregious of adverse 27 factors.” A categorical rule denying asylum in all cases of entry without inspection, then, runs counter to the 28 longstanding rule that manner of entry cannot be dispositive in all cases.

⁷ The United States has acceded to the international 1967 Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees and is bound by it.
Orantes-Hernandez, 919 F.2d at 551. By acceding to the Protocol, the United States agreed to comply with the 1951 Refugee Convention. Id. The Convention’s prohibition on penalties reflects a recognition of the reality of being a refugee – a person who is, by definition, fleeing persecution. See UN Ad Hoc Committee on Refugees and Stateless Persons, Memorandum by the Secretary-General, UN Doc. E/AC.32/2, Ch. XI, Art. 24. Para. 2 (Jan. 3, 1950) (“A refugee whose departure from his country of origin is usually a flight, is rarely in a position to comply with the requirements for legal entry . . . into the country of refuge.”). For this reason, the UNHCR’s Introductory Note to the Convention describes the prohibition on penalizing a refugee for her manner of entry as one of the Convention’s “fundamental principles.” See Introductory Note (UNHCR) (2010) at 3, UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. Prohibiting a person from applying for asylum merely because she entered at a place other than a port of entry is a penalty inconsistent with Article 33(1).

1 ability to obtain asylum merely because of a refugee's manner of entry leaves no such chance, and 2 operates the same way as a ban on applying for asylum, thus rendering § 1158(a)(1) an empty 3 vessel.

4 2. The federal register notice accompanying the regulation argues that the Attorney General 5 could lawfully enact the regulation because the asylum statute allows him to "establish additional 6 limitations and conditions, consistent with [§ 1158], under which an alien shall be ineligible for 7 asylum." 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(2)(C). The Attorney General's power is phrased in terms of imposing 8 additional conditions and limitations on a person's eligibility for asylum because the statute already 9 sets out six exceptions to eligibility. Critically, the statute then makes clear that the Attorney
10 General does not have unfettered discretion to craft whatever additional limitations and conditions 11 he believes appropriate, but may only impose additional limitations and conditions that are 12 "consistent with this section." 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(2)(C).
13

14 A per se ban on asylum for all those who enter between ports at the U.S.-Mexico border is 15 not consistent with the nature of the six limitations already contained in the statute:
16

17 (i) the alien ordered, incited, assisted, or otherwise participated in the 18 persecution of any person on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion;

19 (ii) the alien, having been convicted by a final judgment of a particularly serious crime, constitutes a danger to the community of the United States;

20 (iii) there are serious reasons for believing that the alien has committed a 21 serious nonpolitical crime outside the United States prior to the arrival of the alien in the United States;

22 (iv) there are reasonable grounds for regarding the alien as a danger to the 23 security of the United States;

24 (v) the alien is described in subclause (I), (II), (III), (IV), or (VI) of section 1182(a)(3)(B)(i) of this title or section 1227(a)(4)(B) of this title (relating to terrorist 25 activity), unless, in the case only of an alien described in subclause (IV) of section
1182(a)(3)(B)(i) of this title, the Attorney General determines, in the Attorney 26 General's discretion, that there are not reasonable grounds for regarding the alien as a danger to the security of the United States; or 27 (vi) the alien was firmly resettled in another country prior to arriving in the 28 United States.

1 The clear upshot of these enumerated bars is that Congress sought to deny asylum
2 only to dangerous individuals and persecutors, as well as those who no longer needed a safe
3 haven. In light of § 1158(a)(1), Congress did not believe that the mere fact that an individual 4 entered between ports made her a danger or threat to the United States. Indeed, there are 5 numerous reasons why asylum applicants cross between ports. See Pinheiro Decl. ¶¶ 26-41 6 (discussing such reasons, including lack of information, safety concerns, and practices by 7 U.S. Border Patrol agents denying access to ports of entry).

9 Under ordinary principles of statutory construction, the Attorney General’s residual 10 authority to promulgate additional conditions or limitations on asylum eligibility must be 11 construed narrowly. See Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams, 532 U.S. 105, 115 (2001)
12 (“residual clause” is limited by “the enumerated categories . . . which are recited just before 13 it”). By requiring that any new limitations be “consistent” with § 1158 as a whole, Congress
14 authorized only limitations that fit within the overall statutory scheme, including the six 15 enumerated grounds of ineligibility. See, e.g., Olmstead v. L.C. ex rel. Zimring, 527 U.S.
16 581, 606 n.16 (1999) (plurality) (rejecting ADA standard that went beyond that articulated in 17 Rehab Act regulations because Congress had directed the ADA regulations be “consistent” 18 with the Rehab Act regulations).

19
20 In short, even if there were any doubt about whether the regulation is consistent with 21 the type of exceptions set out in the statute, Congress eliminated that doubt by expressly 22 stating that one is eligible for asylum “whether or not” they entered at a port of entry.
23 Whatever additional exceptions to asylum eligibility the Attorney General may impose, he 24 certainly cannot make entry between ports a per se ground of ineligibility.⁸

26 _____
27 ⁸ Perhaps out of appreciation for the narrow scope of Congress’s grant in § 1158(b)(2)(C), no Attorney General has ever
28 promulgated a regulation pursuant to his or her § 1158(b)(2)(C) authority as sweeping as the one here, or with the power to so fully undermine the asylum statute. Indeed, the Interim Final Rule points to only one regulatory exercise of § 1158(b)(2)(C). See Interim Final Rule at 19. This marked departure from past practice is a development that in itself

B. The President Likewise Lacks Authority To Deny Asylum To All Who Enter Without Inspection.

The President also lacks authority to categorically ban asylum for all those who enter between ports on the US.-Mexico border, for two reasons. First, the President’s 212(f) power applies only to suspending or restricting “entry.” It does not allow the President to impose conditions on those who have already entered. Second, even if the President’s 212(f) power did permit him to impose conditions on those who already entered, it does not permit him to contravene Congress’s specific command that individuals who enter without inspection may apply for asylum.

1. Section 212(f) gives the President the power to “suspend the entry” of noncitizens and impose “restrictions” on their “entry.” 8 U.S.C. § 1182(f). It does not refer to immigration proceedings once an individual has entered the country, nor does it reference the complex, reticulated scheme Congress has put in place to govern what relief is available, and to whom, in such post-entry proceedings. By a reading of its plain text, section 212(f) does not grant the President any authority to dictate what forms of relief are available to a person who has already entered. Indeed, if 212(f) provided that power, the President could recreate the entire immigration system – including, as here, by restructuring what forms of relief are available once an individual has already entered.

2. Even if Section 212(f) did authorize regulation of events after entry (which it does not), it certainly cannot authorize the direct repudiation of a congressional command. The implications of allowing such a blatant repudiation of Congress are extreme. The President could literally rewrite the immigration laws. He could decree, for example, that henceforth only certain of the five protected asylum grounds will be acceptable bases for asylum. See 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42) (providing for asylum based on a well-founded fear of persecution on account of “race, religion, signals the need for caution, especially where there has been no notice and comment or a 30-day grace period, as required by the APA. Cf. Util. Air Reg. Group v. EPA, 134 S. Ct. 2427, 2444 (2014) (When an agency claims to discover “an unheralded power” lying dormant “in a long-extant statute,” courts “typically greet its announcement with a measure of skepticism.”).

1 nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion”). Or he could unilaterally
2 heighten the standards for all forms of relief from removal, effectively writing the statutes Congress
3 enacted out of existence.

4 That cannot be. As Justice Jackson explained nearly 70 years ago: “When the President takes 5 measures incompatible with the expressed or implied will of Congress, his power is at its lowest ebb, 6 for then he can rely only upon his own constitutional powers minus any constitutional powers of 7 Congress over the matter.” Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 637 (1952)
8 (Jackson, J., concurring). “Presidential claim to a power at once so conclusive and preclusive must 9 be scrutinized with caution, for what is at stake is the equilibrium established by our constitutional 10 system.” Id. at 638.

11
12 The government has cited the Supreme Court’s travel ban decision in Hawaii for support in 13 enacting the asylum § 212(f) Proclamation. But the Court’s Hawaii decision actually undermines 14 the Proclamation here. In Hawaii, the Court found that the plaintiffs in that case could not “point to 15 any contradiction with another provision of the INA.” 138 S. Ct. at 2412. It was careful to 16 acknowledge that in another case, where a plaintiff could identify a direct conflict between the 17 President’s proclamation and a statute, Congress’s lawmaking authority would prevail. See id. at 18 2412 (“[T]his is not a situation where ‘Congress has stepped into the space and solved the exact
19 problem.’”); id. at 2411 (“We may assume that § 1182(f) does not allow the President to expressly 20 override particular provisions of the INA.”). This case represents just the situation Hawaii
21 hypothesized, where the President is seeking to eviscerate a statute directly on point. Where, as 22 here, Congress has spoken directly to the issue in a statute, the President has no authority to 23 disregard that statute.

THE REMAINING FACTORS TIP DECIDELY IN FAVOR OF GRANTING A TRO AND PRSERVING THE STATUS QUO

2 Plaintiffs are experiencing irreparable harm because they are being “depriv[ed] of a 3 procedural protection to which [they are] entitled” under the APA. Sugar Cane Growers
4 Cooperative of Fla. v. Veneman, 289 F.3d 89, 94–95 (D.C. Cir. 2002). If relief were unavailable
5 under such circumstances, “section 553 would be a dead letter.” Id. at 95. And unless the new rule
6 is stayed, Plaintiffs’ injuries cannot be cured by ultimate success on the merits in this case. See Wis.
7 Gas Co. v. Fed. Energy Regulatory Comm’n, 758 F.2d 669, 674 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Section 553 “is 8 designed to ensure that affected parties have an opportunity to participate in and influence agency 9 decision making at an early stage, when the agency is more likely to give real consideration to 10 alternative ideas.” New Jersey v. EPA, 626 F.2d 1038, 1049 (D.C. Cir.1980) (citation and internal 11 quotation marks omitted). “[P]ermitting the submission of views after the effective date of a 12 regulation is no substitute for the right of interested persons to make their views known to the 13 agency in time to influence the rulemaking process in a meaningful way.” Block, 655 F.2d at 1158.
14 Indeed, if the rule is allowed to go into effect for any real period, the agencies are “far less likely to 15 be receptive to comments.” N. Mariana Islands v. U.S., 686 F. Supp. 2d 7, 18 (D.D.C. 2009).
16 “Every day the [rules] stand is another day Defendants may enforce regulations likely promulgated 17 in violation of the APA’s notice and comment provision, without Plaintiffs’ advance input.”
18 California v. Health & Human Servs., 281 F. Supp. 3d 806, 829–30 (N.D. Cal. 2017).
19
21

22 Had Defendants provided an opportunity for notice and comment before putting the rule into 23 effect, Plaintiffs would have had the opportunity to inform Defendants of their serious concerns. See
24 Complaint ¶ 100; Pinheiro Decl. ¶ 14; Declaration of Michael Smith, Refugee Rights Program
25 Director, East Bay Sanctuary Covenant (Nov. 9, 2018), at ¶ 20; Declaration of Daniel Sharp, Legal 26 Director, Central American Resource Center, Los Angeles (Nov. 9, 2014), at ¶ 14.
27

28 Moreover, the new policy makes far-reaching changes that will harm Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs are

1 threatened with the immediate prospect of dramatically diverting their resources to account for the 2 blanket ineligibility for asylum of so much of their clientele. See Complaint ¶¶ 83-86, 88-89, 91, 93-
3 95, 98-99; Pinheiro Decl. ¶¶ 9-10, 12-13; Smith Decl. ¶¶ 14-15, 17-19; Sharp Decl. ¶¶ 10-11, 13;
4 Manning Decl. ¶¶ 8-12. For example, Plaintiff Innovation Law Lab has created a nationwide system
5 of training and mentoring pro bono counsel in asylum proceedings. Manning Decl. ¶ 11. The new 6 policy precluding certain individuals from applying for asylum would force Innovation Lab to 7 reallocate considerable resources to understanding the new regulatory landscape, and to handling
8 complicated appeals before the Board of Immigration Appeals and the circuit courts. Id. ¶ 12. See 9 also Sharp Decl. ¶ 13 (similar); Nat'l Council of La Raza v. Cegavske, 800 F.3d 1032, 1040 (9th Cir.
10 2015) (holding plaintiff demonstrated injury where organization would not have diverted resources
11 to voter registration drives but for state's actions); SurvJustice Inc. v. DeVos, No. 18-CV-00535-JSC, 12 2018 WL 4770741, at *8 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 1, 2018) (finding plaintiff suffered injury where 13 "challenged policy required it to divert resources it 'otherwise would spend in other ways'") (citing 14 El Rescate Legal Servs., Inc. v. Exec. Office of Immigration Review, 959 F.2d 742, 748 (9th Cir.
15 1991)).

18 In addition, several of the Plaintiff organizations face an extraordinary loss of funding tied to 19 asylum applications, threatening their very existence. See Complaint ¶¶ 80-82, 87, 90, 97; Pinheiro
20 Decl. ¶ 11; Smith Decl. ¶¶ 16; Sharp Decl. ¶¶ 7, 12; Manning Decl. ¶ 11. For instance, Plaintiff East
21 Bay Sanctuary Covenant ("ESBC") mainly serves clients who entered without inspection in filing
22 affirmative asylum applications. Smith Decl. ¶ 9. The organization receives funding from the State
23 of California to partially defray costs for many of the applications it files. Id. ¶ 16. In 2017 alone, 24 the organization received approximately $304,000 for filing 152 affirmative asylum applications for 25 individuals who entered without inspection. Id. The new policy would imminent harm Plaintiff 26 ESBC by jeopardizing a significant portion of its budget. See also Sharp Decl. ¶ 12 (explaining how 27 the new policy would financially strain Plaintiff CARECEN by forcing attorneys to devote more 28

1 hours per case to pursue complex non-asylum relief, while receiving a flat per-case reimbursement
2 rate from the State of California); Pinheira Decl. ¶¶ 11-12 (explaining how Plaintiff Al Otro Lado
3 would have to prepare additional applications for family members, incurring greater financial costs).

4 In contrast, the government cannot point to any real harm that would result from the 5 requested TRO. With regard to the procedural violations, the government can begin a new 6 rulemaking process, this time following the mandatory procedures. As explained above, the current 7 rule is not made in response to an emergency, and a delay will not harm the public interest.

9 Moreover, in cases against the government, the government's interest and public interest
10 factors "merge." Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435 (2009). As explained above, there is no urgent 11 need to have the new asylum ban in effect immediately. But if the ban is in effect, hundreds or 12 thousands of vulnerable asylum seekers will be summarily denied asylum and could therefore be 13 deported pursuant to a rule that violates the clear terms of the statute Congress enacted. "Of course 14 there is a public interest in preventing aliens from being wrongfully removed, particularly to 15 countries where they are likely to face substantial harm." Id. at 436.
16

17 Finally, the public interest is served when administrative agencies comply with their 18 obligations under the APA. See New Jersey, 626 F.2d at 1045 ("It is now a commonplace that 19 notice-and-comment rule-making is a primary method of assuring that an agency's decisions will be 20 informed and responsive."); Cresote Council v. Johnson, 555 F.Supp.2d 36, 40 (D.D.C. 2008)
21 (explaining that there is a "general public interest in open and accountable agency decision-22 making"). Thus, "the balance of hardships tips sharply in [Plaintiffs'] favor." All. for the Wild
23 Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1131.
